if he saw fit. Of course he saw fit, and to-day no silver of any being coined in the United States.

Harrison of course signed this bill. Thus he succeeded in doing his platform condemned the democrats for trying to do.

In 1890 another turn in the political wheel of fortune came. The democ in twenty-nine states declared plainly for the free coinage of silver. On stump they assailed the republicans for their course in defeating the fr age measure in 1889. They were victorious, electing about three-fourths lower house. More than two-thirds of these representatives were out pledged free coinage men. Then the people said: "We are going to get thing at last." But to their deep disgust and disappointment the Bland bill wa killed, and all hopes of financial relief from this congress were blasted. During all this time Grover Cleveland has been using all his influence and prestige as an ex-president and prospective candidate, to prevent any silver legislation.

The history of the two great conventions just held is too fresh to need com ment. In each the money power scored a signal triumph. The question that was aphe most in the minds of the people was taboed in both conventions. A smpses of cu politics, if he had attended both conventions, would hardly have silver question.
