Ass Youmans of Carthage, Me., Hanged

to a Tree by Roomers. ARKANSAS CITY, Kan., Sept 30. Asa Youmans, who formerly lived at Carthage, Mo. came to the strip in company with a lot of Missourians who were regularly organized and paid by a syndicate of real estate men. When the first runners of the boomers reached Chikaska near where Blackwell now stands, they found fifty men holding down claims with no other baggage than their rifles. This man Youmans was holding two, claiming that his friend and partner had gone out on a search for water. The first comers did not attempt to dislodge him, but those who came later, to whom the circumstances had been reported, planted their flags determined to stand by them. Youmans came up to two of them and ordered them off, at the same time presenting the muzzle of his rife. One of the men asked him for his certificate. He said he had none and did not propose to get one; that he had support enough to make good his claim, at the same time add-ing: "I'm a sooner, and I'd like to know what in-jou are going to do

The new school house at Diller was completed in time for the fall term and the scholars are happy.

The two men, covered as they were, went away, but in less than an hour returned with at least two dozen of their friends, captured You-mans and proceeded to make him ready for a trial by Judge Lynch. In what was probably a spirit of bra-vado Youmans said he had killed two settlers and would get away with some more. This so exasperated the men that they placed a lariat about his neck and pulled him up to a tree, where they left his body as a warning

LEAVING IN DESPAIR.

Hund eds of People Desert the New Country on Account of Its Hardebips. ENID. Ok. Sept. 20 .- The terrible sand storm that prevailed in the western part of the Cherokee strip Sunday and yesterday was a most unfortunate thing for the Cherokee strip, for, besides causing great suffering, it discouraged the new settlers, and hundreds of them left the strip last evening and to-day, determined never to return. The gale yesterday was about as furious as it was Sunday, but the sand was worse, for the constant moving about of horses and wagons on and near the town sites so stirred up the fine sand that it was blown in the air constantly in a perfect cloud. A view of Enid from a point a half mile away showed only a few scattering tents and covered wagons the outskirts, and all the rest was obscured in one cloud of red sand. Along the roadway between the two rival towns called Enid, teams and wagons were constantly passing and, seen from a distance, the roadway was one long, narrow, cloud of sand, con-necting two other clouds, one at each townsite. Men wore handkerchiefs over their faces to protect their eyes. Silk handkerchiefs were better for this purpose because they are easily seen through, and they could have been sold by the hundreds at high prices. Goggles or any other protection for the eyes, save bandkerchiefs, it was absolutely impossible to get, and a man with goggles might have sold thousands at a dollar a pair. More money than that was offered for pairs that some people had had the forethought to bring along with them, but they refused to part with them. The fine, red sand sifted into every crack and crevice, and food of all kinds that some people were fortunate enough to have was made almost unfit to eat. The great scarcity of water on a hot, dusty day added to the suffering of the people. Even the supply of alkali water ran short and the price was raised. Pop became almost the sole article of Pop became almost the sole article of drink, the deputy marshals having early in the day agrested the men who were selling beer at fifty cents a bottle. Few people made any pre-tense of washing their faces or hands while the gale lasted, but last evening, when the wind went down, many people wanted to wash, and a wise man at the railroad station at Enid bought alkali water which necessitated the amputation of that member. It was not a factional fight, as all were Jones men.

at '2 a barrel, got their wash basins and let people get in line and wash their hands and faces at five cents apiece. More than 500 people washed themselves at this price and they all wiped on three towels, the man being unable to get more.
