

Ben Elliott—from "Yonder"—makes his entry into the lumbering town of Tincup. He has brought along an old man, Don Stuart, who had been eager to reach Tincup.

CHAPTER I—Continued

Watchers felt their middles aching as they followed those straining contestants. Again the Bull sought to strike Elliott's extended hand and missed by inches. His left hand raised jerkily, up and up. His body tilted. His great torso was twisting, wrenching at the hips, and, seeing this, Elliott leaped high, came down running, sent water sloshing back and forth the length of the stick until with a throaty cry of rage and humiliation, of hatred and jealousy, the great Bull, missing a stride, went sideways and backward, disappeared beneath the surface of the pond with a mighty splash and came up blowing and shaking his black thatched head.

Hats went into the air, then, along with yips and yells and enthusiastic oaths as Ben Elliott, panting heavily, brought the log to a stop and, hands on his knees, stood blowing and grinning and watching the man whose title he had taken swill for the broom sticks. The Bull slunk quickly toward the boiler room of the mill, water streaming from his pants and sleeves. The pond man threw out his pike pole and brought the cedar log to shore and there Birney, the announcer and master of ceremonies, greeted Elliott with a clap on the back and, with the other hand, thrust a roll of currency at him.

"Here's your money as you sure deserve it," he cried, close in Ben's ear to make himself heard. "You'd got it on a foul, anyhow!" Others surged around the victor and Elliott accepted this homage modestly. "Luck!" he said to one enthusiastic well-wisher. "I got the breaks in luck."

"Luck be damned!" shrilled Bird-Eye. "I'll lick any man you say 'twas luck! You got stuff, me b'y; you got guts!" "Thanks, chum!" Elliott laughed. "I hope you don't find me out!" He shouldered his way slowly to his pack-sack and, surrounded by his admirers, with Bird-Eye in the fore, changed to his shoes again. He looked about for Don Stuart, craning his neck to see over the crowd which was now moving up toward Tincup's main thoroughfare.

"Who ye want?" Bird Eye asked "Owd Donny?" "Yeah, Stuart. The old duffer's broke, on top of being sick, and I want to look out for him." A man at his elbow said cautiously: "I'm afeerd old Don won't do much visitin' in Tincup." Bird-Eye turned to him inquiringly and the man nodded. "Brandon. He found him here while th' birlin' was goin' on. He's likely made other arrangements."

and swinging on. He overtook the two he followed just in time to hear Stuart gasp: "—ain't long to live, Nick. I'd like to stay here. . . . Ain't pleasant to be sick and not among friends." "Never mind," the other said as one might to a protesting child. "I've told you any number of times to stay away."

On this reply Elliott moved abreast of the man. "Hello, old timer," he said, addressing Stuart. "Going some place?" He did not look at the man said to be Nicholas Brandon. His manner on the question was almost casual. "Oh . . . hello," Dan panted. "I . . . Mister Brandon, here . . . won't let me . . . stay."

Then Elliott looked at Brandon. A man of undetermined age; not old, neither young. Powerfully built, with a peculiarly white face and eyes as black as night. These eyes bored into Elliott's now, keenly, intelligently, with the look of a man who is accustomed to gauging others without delay or hesitation. "Oh, this man doesn't want you to stay!" Ben said softly. And then with a smile, to Brandon: "I sort of took the old timer under my wing today. He wants to stay here quite badly. I'll look after him."

"There's no place for him here," Brandon said positively. "Come, Stuart, it's almost train time." He twitched at the old man's arm but Ben broke in, brow wrinkled as if he wanted to handle a perplexing matter fairly. "Well, now, say! No place? Suppose a place was made for him a few days? I'd sort of planned on that. There's a hotel here, and I'd be willing to—"

"I don't know you," Brandon interrupted and irritability crept into his voice. "I've never even seen you. I've known this man for years. He's an old employee of mine. This is my affair. I never have others, especially strangers, meddling." A low whisper came from Stuart and Ben rubbed his chin with one knuckle. "Yeah, I am butting in, I guess. But . . . You see, the old timer told me a little about himself. He's been lonesome a long time. I take it. He's not what you'd call in robust health. I figure that if I was in his shape I'd like to be with a few old friends myself and if—"

In the distance a train whistled and on the sound Brandon's eyes snapped. "I've no time to argue my affairs," he said sharply. "Come, Stuart." "But, Nick! See . . . here," Elliott asked. "Yeah, Stuart. The old duffer's broke, on top of being sick, and I want to look out for him." A man at his elbow said cautiously: "I'm afeerd old Don won't do much visitin' in Tincup." Bird-Eye turned to him inquiringly and the man nodded. "Brandon. He found him here while th' birlin' was goin' on. He's likely made other arrangements."

With a Sharp Oath Brandon Went Down into the Half-Thawed Mire of the Street.

Nick . . . I'll never get back . . . again. It's lonesome, bein' sick . . . alone, where you can't . . . Nick! You're hurtin' my wrist!" He winced from the grasp and on that last shadow of a smile went out of Ben Elliott's face. He put himself squarely before Brandon. "Let him go," he said quietly, but his look drove hard into those black eyes. The man hesitated and flushed. "If you aren't looking for trouble," he said, voice edged with wrath, "you'll keep out of this!" "Fair enough. But unless you've got a better reason than I know about, let the old timer alone! Let go of his wrist!" he added sharply, as Stuart winced again. "I'll thank you to keep out of—" clutch on Don Stuart's arm loosened. With a snarl Brandon drew back and swung for Ben's jaw. Elliott ducked, swayed forward and bending his supple body caught Brandon about the middle, drove his head into the man's chest, raised a knee to his groin, lifted him from his feet, swung, shoved and flung him free.

With a sharp oath Brandon went down in the half-thawed mire of the street, sprawling ignominiously on his back. Well, now! That was something else again. Men had been coming, edging cautiously near during the brief argument between Elliott and Nicholas Brandon. But when Brandon, the man who ruled Tincup and its county, was seen lifted from his feet and tossed ignominiously into the mud, trampled by his horses, stirred by the wheels of his wagons and tractors, the street which led through the town, to his mill . . . Well, then they came a-running!

Bird-Eye cackled an impudent laugh and turned to watch the faces of the vanguard who came to see their lege lord, sprawled in the mud there, scramble to his feet. Their voices were raised in incredulity. In two decades and more no man save Bird-Eye Blaine had dared lift even his voice in Tincup in other than respect for Nicholas Brandon. And now this stranger had picked him up and thrown him away!

But Brandon was up, lurching for the sidewalk where Ben Elliott stood, legs spread, fists clenched but with good humor repossessed and grinning as he had grinned at Bull Duval; grinning as a man will who loves combat for its own sake and not at all as one who fights in red rage. However his smile faded and his jaw settled as Brandon lifted his face in that rush. Murder was there. In the black eyes, in the loose hanging of the lower lip, in the purple flush of his cheeks. Murder, and no less. As quickly as that homicidal look had come, it passed. Something like fear swept those eyes, driving it away. Not fear of this encounter, Ben knew; not fear of a stronger, younger man. Something else again; something entirely different. It was the sort of fear that comes from within; the kind of fear a man has for his own impulses.

Brandon halted abruptly. His fists relaxed into hands and with one of them he brushed rather aimlessly at mud on his sleeve. A dozen men were close, then, holding back, watching, waiting, listening. Others were coming. And as Brandon halted, looking up into Elliott's face and evidently fighting for self-control, one of these new arrivals pushed to the front and came up importantly. "What's the matter, Mr. Brandon?" he asked sharply, with the manner of one ready to render service. Brandon did not reply at once. He settled his coat on his shoulders. "Gully, eh?" He cleared his throat at length. "Now how about this disruption of the peace, anyhow?"

The sheriff spoke. "You see, Able, 'twas this way, Mr.—" "Now, just a minute, Art. This accused has pleaded guilty, as I understand it. I don't see any need of anybody else saying anything. He's thrown himself on the mercy of the court, you might say, and it's regular and proper and according to the spirit of the statute that I question him before passing sentence." The sheriff sniffed and subsided. Clearly, there was little friendship between him and the Justice. "Now, Mr. . . . Able glanced at the complaint again. "Mr. Ben Elliott, how come that you go about the country tossing reputable citizens into the mud?"

"Why, he was trying to make a friend of mine do something he didn't want to do. That's all. I butted in, I guess; he got hard and so,"—shrug—"I lost my head for a minute and put him in his place." "In the mud, you mean." "Yeah. In the mud." "Well, go on; go on. Go back to the beginning. I want to know all about this affair." Elliott drew a long breath. "I started for Tincup several days ago. I was a long ways off, over in Minnesota. This morning I got down to the junction west of here and while I waited for my train got talking to this old timer, Don Stuart, who was in the station. Maybe you know him, Judge. Other folks here do." Able blinked twice; hard. "The old fellow is about all in, I'd say. He's got it into his head that he's about to die and probably his guess isn't such a bad one. Seems this used to be his stamping ground, that he's been away a long time and that he'd started back to finish his days here where he could see some old friends. He went broke on the way and was just sitting there this morning waiting for something to happen. I happened. I wasn't any too well heeled myself, but I had enough for his ticket so I brought him along.

"As luck would have it, I got a chance to pick up a few dollars of Tincup money as soon as we got in and I had to have it, with the old timer on my hands. While I was busy getting this cash this man Brandon evidently saw my buddy and started rushing him back to the depot to take the next train back to where he came from. I didn't like that so well. I tried to talk him out of it but Mr. Brandon isn't a greater talker. That's all. . . . Here I am!" (TO BE CONTINUED.)

son of Nicholas Brandon. Are you guilty?" From the rear windows of his cluttered little office, Able had watched young Ben Elliott emerge from the status of a complete stranger to the populace to that of its latest hero by sending Mr. Bull Duval to a damp and ignominious finish in the log birling. After that he picked up an old clarinet and commenced to play a halting, aimless and not completely musical tune.

He was so occupied either with the musical performance or with his thoughts that he did not hear the tramp of many feet on the walk outside and was unaware that he was about to be called on to function in an official capacity. When the door opened, though, and Ben Elliott, Hickens, the sheriff, and Nicholas Brandon, followed, it seemed, by the total male population of the county, surged through the doorway, the clarinet's squawking leaped into a shrill squeal and died away. The judge's feet dropped to the floor and he swung his chair to face the entrance.

The sheriff stated his errand, the complaint was drawn, Nicholas Brandon affixed his signature and then for the first time Able looked closely into the face of the defendant. It was a long and searching look and was met steadily by a pair of clear steel-gray eyes. "Are you guilty or not?" Able repeated and Ben Elliott who had stood at ease before him, slouch hat in his great brown hands, gave his head a grave twist. "Well, if pitching a man off the sidewalk into the mud is called assault and battery in Tincup, then I'm about a hundred per cent guilty," he said. A stir in the room followed that and Able frowned, a convincingly judicial frown. "Gully, eh?" He cleared his throat at length. "Now how about this disruption of the peace, anyhow?" The sheriff spoke. "You see, Able, 'twas this way, Mr.—" "Now, just a minute, Art. This accused has pleaded guilty, as I understand it. I don't see any need of anybody else saying anything. He's thrown himself on the mercy of the court, you might say, and it's regular and proper and according to the spirit of the statute that I question him before passing sentence." The sheriff sniffed and subsided. Clearly, there was little friendship between him and the Justice. "Now, Mr. . . . Able glanced at the complaint again. "Mr. Ben Elliott, how come that you go about the country tossing reputable citizens into the mud?"

"Why, he was trying to make a friend of mine do something he didn't want to do. That's all. I butted in, I guess; he got hard and so,"—shrug—"I lost my head for a minute and put him in his place." "In the mud, you mean." "Yeah. In the mud." "Well, go on; go on. Go back to the beginning. I want to know all about this affair." Elliott drew a long breath. "I started for Tincup several days ago. I was a long ways off, over in Minnesota. This morning I got down to the junction west of here and while I waited for my train got talking to this old timer, Don Stuart, who was in the station. Maybe you know him, Judge. Other folks here do." Able blinked twice; hard. "The old fellow is about all in, I'd say. He's got it into his head that he's about to die and probably his guess isn't such a bad one. Seems this used to be his stamping ground, that he's been away a long time and that he'd started back to finish his days here where he could see some old friends. He went broke on the way and was just sitting there this morning waiting for something to happen. I happened. I wasn't any too well heeled myself, but I had enough for his ticket so I brought him along.

"As luck would have it, I got a chance to pick up a few dollars of Tincup money as soon as we got in and I had to have it, with the old timer on my hands. While I was busy getting this cash this man Brandon evidently saw my buddy and started rushing him back to the depot to take the next train back to where he came from. I didn't like that so well. I tried to talk him out of it but Mr. Brandon isn't a greater talker. That's all. . . . Here I am!" (TO BE CONTINUED.)

son of Nicholas Brandon. Are you guilty?" From the rear windows of his cluttered little office, Able had watched young Ben Elliott emerge from the status of a complete stranger to the populace to that of its latest hero by sending Mr. Bull Duval to a damp and ignominious finish in the log birling. After that he picked up an old clarinet and commenced to play a halting, aimless and not completely musical tune.

Thirty Years
By JEWELL H. MOGFORD
McClure Newspaper Syndicate,
WNU Service.

PLACING his watch on his desk in front of him, Kenneth Rowell picked up the gun. With his free hand he pulled his evening coat back and with calm, calculating movement, placed the muzzle over his heart.

His handsome young face was set and colorless, his fine body tense. He looked at the watch. In the soft light of the shaded gas jet the minute hand marked five minutes to eleven.

Five minutes to wait. He relaxed slightly. He must pull the trigger at exactly eleven. That had been Kathleen's last caution an hour ago as they stood on the little balcony of the country club. "We must go together, darling—at the same instant." He could hear again the half-sob with her whispered words as her small head nestled against his shoulder.

He had held her close—the first time he had ever taken her in his arms, for, young as she was, she was another man's wife. "I shall not see him again," Kathleen had said, after a moment. "I'll leave a note on his desk." He did not like to think of Chauncey Grimes. Yet, they were taking the only way out, he and Kathleen.

He held the gun against his heart again. Three minutes now. "We must both be sure of the time," she had cautioned again, "and very careful." He had known in the stillness that followed that she was trying to banish the fear of a possible slip in their plans. "For I could never bear being without you, darling, no matter where."

He forced his mind to register the time. One more minute. Involuntarily he turned the gun and looked into the muzzle. The cold ugliness of its startled him. Kathleen, at this moment, too, must be frightened. But in a few seconds now a bullet—vainly he tried to force back this thought—a bullet would go tearing through her soft flesh—and his own.

The minute hand again. It plainly marked eleven-thirty. Frantically he reached the wall telephone and turned the crank. Then, at last, the Grimes' butler, excitedly: "Mrs. Grimes? She's gone! Came back from the club, must have gone out again by the side door . . . husband frantic, just found a note on his desk . . . suicide, yes, at exactly eleven, the note said, but didn't say where . . . gun gone, too . . ." The scattered words, each a definite flame, burnt into his brain. "Too late! She had gone alone!"

Give Thought to Abnormal Child
Neglecting and Spoiling
Are Both Extremes
to Be Avoided.

Depending on what kind of parents they have, handicapped children are classified into three groups by Dr. John Ruhrah, author of "The Parent and the Handicapped Child," in Hygeia Magazine. The crippled child may be neglected, or he may be spoiled, or he may be treated sensibly and correctly.

The parents of the neglected child will feel outraged that such a thing as a handicapped child has been wished on them. They are liable to worry a bit and then they shut the child out of their lives and emotions as far as possible and feel no responsibility for his preparation for life.

The second set of parents make pity, of themselves and of the child, the biggest stumbling block in the way of educating the child. If the parent pities the child, the child will pity himself instead of making the best of his condition. The child is allowed to become spoiled, irritable, exacting, wanting everything his own way and doing nothing for himself.

There is the third set of parents who are quick to realize that they have a problem on their hands, and they set about learning how best to solve it. The child must be taught first that he is to behave as other children do as far as he is able, taking into consideration his handicap. The child can be taught independence if the parent finds out what the child can do for himself and what he cannot do, and then does only what is necessary. Children like to do things for themselves and it is one way they learn not only to do things, but to be independent. This also applies to teaching the child to make decisions for himself. Children who are never allowed to decide things for themselves grow up into men and women who have a hard time, and no one needs self-confidence and independence more than the handicapped person.

Idleness is bad and makes children unhappy. The handicapped child should be kept occupied with games and hobbies in which he is interested, but there should be a careful steering between overexertion and underexertion. All physically handicapped children need extra rest, which should be a part of the daily routine. Too much exercise is worse than none.

A theory that changes in climate conditions which have brought drouths to western Canada and parts of the United States may be caused by the recession of glaciers in the Canadian Northwest and Alaska is being studied by a committee of the British Association for the Advancement of Science under the secretaryship of Moses B. Cotsworth of Vancouver and London.

The scientists have found that the warm winds of the Pacific are not only demolishing great ice sheets in this district but are hollowing out a path across northern Canada on their way east. Formerly they were diverted by ice fields in the North and passed through southern British Columbia to drop their moisture in rain on the Canadian and United States prairies.

Cotsworth suggests, may prove helpful in the detection of further climatic changes.

If You Eat Starches Meats, Sweets Read This
They're All Necessary Foods—But All Acid-Forming. Hence Most of Us Have "Acid Stomach" At Times. Easy Now to Relieve.

Doctors say that much of the so-called "indigestion," from which so many of us suffer, is really acid indigestion . . . brought about by too many acid-forming foods in our modern diet. And that there is now a way to relieve this . . . often in minutes!

Simply take Phillips' Milk of Magnesia after meals. Almost immediately this acts to neutralize the stomach acidity that brings on your trouble. You "forget you have a stomach!"

Try this just once! Take either the familiar liquid "PHILLIPS'" or, now the convenient new Phillips' Milk of Magnesia Tablets. But be sure you get Genuine "PHILLIPS".

Also in Tablet Form:
Phillips' Milk of Magnesia Tablets are now on sale at all drug stores everywhere. Each tiny tablet is the equivalent of a teaspoonful of Genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

PHILLIPS' Milk of Magnesia
Wise Old Bird
"So you always pay down?"
"Yes, then I don't have to worry about paying up."

300 CANDLEPOWER
LIGHT
for 1¢
A NIGHT
WITH A
Coleman
LAMP
Light that floods the whole room with a clear, mellow radiance! The nearest to daylight of any artificial light.

More light than 30 common kerosene lamps. Light that protects your sight! Plenty of light for every home need. Easy to operate. . . . easy to keep going. Only Coleman gives you so much light for so little cost. Beautiful new models with parchment shades.

See your hardware or housefurnishing dealer. If he doesn't handle, write us.
The Coleman Lamp & Stove Company
Dept. W-1111, Wichita, Kans.; Chicago, Ill.; Los Angeles, Calif.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Toronto, Ontario, Canada. C-1111

They Know
None think the great unhappy but the great.

Help Kidneys
If poorly functioning Kidneys and Bladder make you suffer from Getting Up Nights, Nervousness, Rheumatic Pains, Stiffness, Burning, Smarting, Itching, or Acidity try the guaranteed Doctor's Prescription Cystex (Sulfadiazine).
Cystex
—Must fix you up or money back. Only 75¢ at druggists.

DO YOU NEED A BUILDER?
Mrs. Frank Anson of 607 S. 7th St., Marshalltown, Iowa, said: "My system had become completely rundown, I was sleepless, had no strength, no appetite, and was thin. Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery strengthened me so that I regained my normal weight and health. I was able to sleep and had a fine appetite." All druggists.
Write Dr. Pierce's Clinic, Buffalo, N. Y.

METROPOLITAN GRAND OPERA
direct from its New York Stage
3-Hour Broadcast by LISTERINE
announced by Geraldine Farrar
Every Saturday - all NBC stations 12:45 P.M., C.S.T. 11:45 A.M., M.T.

Cuticura
Talcum Powder
Protect your skin with a powder that is mildly antiseptic and at the same time fine, soft and smooth as silk. Fragrant, oriental balsamic essential oils colorize the medication of Cuticura's Talcum. Instantly upon touching the skin these oils start their soothing, healing work and you are protected against irritation.

I WANT A PARTNER
I own a paint factory and want a partner in your locality who will invest $500 to $1000. I will match your investment and give you two-thirds of the profits. Prefer an established business such as drug store, hardware store or lumber yard. Write for details. Address P. O. Box 343, Geneva, Nebr.

OLD AGE PENSION INFORMATION
ENCLOSE STAMP
JUDGE LEHMAN, HUMBOLDT, KANS.