

CHAPTER XII-Continued --15---

He went into his sleeping chamber and took down a rifle from its belled and fought to get the post rack on a pair of antlers. He threw open the chamber but it was empty. door. He jerked open a dresser drawer and pawed through it in a fruitless search for cartridges, cursing bewas ragged as he threw the rifle on the bed and rumpled his hair wildly.

"Bring Elliott out!" "Show us Ben!" "Get a rail!" These and other terrifying cries stood out above the constant mutter of the mob, Brandon rushed back to the front jeers which were forerunners of a forward. great billow of savage, snarling rage.

with the sign post. He heard the they halted. stair door tried and a voice called: "Hustle with that post!"

He Could Not Satisfy Them.

Coming! They were coming in to get him!

He could not satisfy them! He to try again but he had not come satisfied. to report, though Brandon had waited late. And now the crowd was back to Dawn's home. howling for Elliott; lacking Elliott, they would take him.

hands, tried to stop his ears. In those menacing cries he heard the Sweet was standing there. knell of his reign. For years he had ruled by the force of his will and now that force was not enough. broken windows. Bit by bit, Ben Elliott had caught the fancy of the country and now, with that group of stout men as a rallying point, the entire town was setting up a demand for the missing Elliott. They wanted Ben Elliott. They would have Ben El-

"Go home!" he screamed and waved his arms, standing close to . . . Fair warning, I'm giving!"

But his words were drowned in a great yell. Men came lugging that and hatred which had grown and post across the street while Tim festered unobserved for years. Jeffers hastened toward them with gestures of protest.

Tincup apart. But no destroyin' of with surly, defiant glares. property until everything else fails!"

His will prevailed a moment. He lifted his face to Brandon.

"We mean business. Will you the fellow only laughed at him. . . . come out and show us Ben or must Laughed! we come and get you? We won't wait much longer." An opening, there, a chance to "Coming!" Brandon croaked. "I'm coming !" A gratified mutter went up from the crowd and burst into shrill words.

Coming? Like the devil, he would go! He was ransacking drawers, now, dumping their contents on the floor in his frantic search for rifle cartridges that should be there. He sought a key for a locked trunk and could not find it. He tried several but his hands shook so that he might have failed to make the proper one operate, even had he found it. Again Jeffers' voice, demanding his presence, came out of a strange seized a hammer and attacked the mit for years. I have thought you girl who is known as the daughter nearly two hours after his start trunk lock. Ammunition must be were my friend but now I know you of a murderer can't let any man that he came in sight of the build-the new snow, completely out of hand at this delay. Two or three aided Tim in his plea for at least temporary moderation but others rewhich would batter down the stair

And then came a hush, a quick, spreading hush which swept the crowd like a shadow. And then cause he found none. His breath rose a quick popping of excited voices.

"Elliott!" "Here he is!" "Look!" 'He's hurt!"

Bundled to the ears in a great overcoat, cap drawn low, supported on the one side by John Martin and on the other side by Able Armitage. he came slowly, painfully out of the office and waved his arms for si- side street. He scarcely seemed to lence as he stood in the shattered be aware of that throng; did not glass of his window, but the sight look either to the right or the left. of him only provoked hoots and All his energy was bent on moving

He gained the middle of the street in an impressive hush. Then The men were having trouble he murmured a word to Able and

He looked about at his men and smiled a trifle weakly, but in his look was a quality which clearly indicated that love which strong men have for their kind. "Its all right, boys," he said, and only those in the first ranks could hear, his voice was that light 'They didn't get me . . . badly. I appreciate this . . . but want you to . . . get back to . . . camp."

He panted for breath and lifted his face to the broken windows above. Far back in that room he caught a glimpse of a face watching him-cocked as though striving afternoon,-Dawn," "It's my fight," he went on. "Not yours. . . . I don't want any . . of you hurt. Go back. . . . Will you go . . . back?"

The crowd stirred. "You bet we will, Ben!" a man called. "Now that you're located; If you ask it, we will!"

Tim Jeffers worked his way to Ben's side and put a hand on his like happiness spread over his face. shoulder, listening to what Able told him.

"Go home, boys!" Tim Jeffers called. "They knifed Ben last night but he's well took care of. You teamsters, get out your horses: we've found what we come for. To row. camp, every last Hoot Owl hand!"

Men relaxed. The post that was did not know where Elliott was, to have shattered in Brandon's me come, . . . You've been so kind, Last night Delaney had promised door was dropped. The mob was so generous, so . . . so friendly.

Slowly Ben Elliott made his way

As Tim Jeffers took his place beside the sick man, Able Armitage He covered his face with his drew into the post office entry to watch the mob disperse. Emory

"The king is dead!" Able muttered solemnly, staring at those "Long live the king!" said Emory. Panse "Dead men tell no tales."

"No, but sometimes a corpse will kick back!"

CHAPTER XIII

FURIOUSLY, Nicholas Brandon saw as the days passed the wrecka broken window. "Clear out, you! age of his power pile up on a floor of public resentment, of loosened expressions of distrust and contempt

As he walked along the street he saw faces leering at him from win-"Hold your heads, now! Give dows, and men he passed averted us Hoot Owl boys a chance. We'll their glances in a gleeful sort of get what we come for or we'll take embarrassment, or looked at him

> In yard and mill he was conscious that his employees were thinking only of his fall. He discharged one man for loafing and

"There's plenty of room at Hoot Owl for good hands," he said and laughed again.

That mob had not wrecked the town as they had threatened but the ruin they left was of far more consequence. Their coming had stripped Brandon of everything but his material possessions and now these only mocked him in survival. Back in the office he paced the place like a caged animal. Mail arrived. He took the packet of letters and drank deeply from his bottle again. He thumbed the letters absently, until the script on one caught his eve. The envelope contained a single sheet of note paper and he unfolded it with trembling fingers. On the sheet was written:

"I never want to see you again. I know now what the whole country "Coming!" he shouted thickly and has known and been afraid to adare my worst enemy, as you are the love her?" The crowd milled, now, trampling sworn enemy of those I love most.

like it, Dawn, being loved?"

love you so?"

whisper. "Please!"

"Ah . . . Like it? It's wonderful, Ben. . . . It's too wonderful!" She averted her face. "And loved by me?"

"I Can't Stand It, Ben!"

"Don't!" she begged in a light

"But it's beyond any power I

It's too wonderful, Ben. Things countered Dawn's note. No thought like it just can't be!"

plain?"

It's given me the only true happi. his snowshoes and departed. ness I've ever had. "And then I had to remember miles, however, and part of the gowhat I am. Can't you see that a ing was in soft footing. So it was

"That's foolish! . . . It's terrible Woman.

I know for you to bear. But let

He stood for a time staring at the me help, dear girl; let me stand by paragraph; then read it again and your side and help!"

ed by an ordered mind, of course,

A meticulous office man was Nich-went about his habitual procedure.

He had received and read a letter.

had combination and keys reposed out and placed them on the desk.

to him, saved since her childhood.

"Meet us at Antler Lodge this af-

Happier memories, that brought;

remarked Dawn's emerging womanhood, that the desire for her had keen kindled in his blood; there in the camp where her father, as the whole country knew, had been with

Sam Faxson on the night when Fax-son fled to his death. But Dawn had never known that. She had laughed

.

his return to Hoot Owl on the mor-

"And all the time I've been won-

"Meet us at Antler Lodge this and been happy at Antler lodge.

one side.

ternoon .- Dawn."

drained his whisky bottle. Such a "No, no! I can't bear it! I note, now, was to have been expect- couldn't take a cloud to you and to your children. . . . And it's all a but his fevered brain had not fore- mistake, all a lie! My father was seen any necessity for abandoning no killer!" Her voice rose in sharp this, the most precious of his hopes. | conviction on that. "He was kind and gentle; he never would hurt anolas Brandon, and though he had other. All these years I've known suffered the severest blow of his ex- it and others know it, but just beperience just now he mechanically ing sure in our own minds isn't enough. The whole world must all the leading magazines of the know! Something tells me my fa-It required no reply. The next step ther is alive somewhere, waiting, in orderly procedure was to file it. watching, suffering. . . . But until we can prove that or something else In the great safe to which only he comes up to banish this cloud. . . . fall, two files side by side. He took both No, don't kiss me again! I can't stand it, I tell you! I can't stand He opened one and a cruel smile it, Ben!"

twitched his lips. It contained let-Sobbing, she fled from the room, ters on paper of varying size, color He made no further moves toand quality. He riffled through these, ward love making after that but far stopping now and again to read a into the night he talked with Dawn phrase, a sentence, a paragraph. . . . of her father. She had not heard over heart-rending discouragement, Pleas, these were; a writing beg- all of the story, he realized. She ging for help . . . and he smiled did not know, for instance, that the tragedy which preceded McManus' mor. In the other file were more let- disappearance took place in Antler ters, some yellowed by age and lodge; she did not know how far these older ones had been written her father had gone in his attempts in the unformed script of a child, to drown sorrow of his wife's death earned, . . "Dear Uncle Nick," they all by drinking. But she did know began. Always that, though the that Faxson was dead, that her fahandwriting grew formed and ma- ther was blamed and that a dusty ture until it was identical with that warrant for his arrest on a charge guished townswoman. on the single sheet he had just read, of homicide still reposed in the These were Dawn McManus' letters | county records.

Next day he declared that he felt He ran through them almost idly, fit to drive back to camp and for prominence-and also a writer. his senses dulled by whisky and the an hour argued with Dawn, trying calamity which had befallen him. A to win her promise that he might narrow slip of tablet paper fell out. come again, but she begged him to He looked at the penciled note on stay away for a time, at least.

CHAPTER XIV

A BLE told Dawn of Ben's activity, watching her face narrowof the time Dawn had brought girls home with her from school for ly because he understood the ob-Thanksgiving and had taken them stacle that was between these two. to the hunting camp for a week-end. He saw hope come, followed by Brandon had gone with the party misgiving and trouble. and it was there that he had first

It was on Friday that Dawn left Tincup, striking across country far from the road toward Hoot Owl. She was going to see. Ben Elliott and tell him that she must see him now, that her heart could have no peace without him; that he must come to her and let her stand beside him while he pried into the past and attempted to make it give up truth.

Martin was alone in the office He read it again. It bore no when she entered and started up date; it was unsoiled; it betrayed so sharply at sight of her that the no indication of the time that had girl, in turn, was startled.

passed since its inscription. The "I'm sorry!" she exclaimed a note had been left on his desk for bit mystified. "Did I frighten you?" him three years before. . . . He "No. Not frightened. . . . My leaned forward sharply and his thoughts were . . . far from here." eyes narrowed. . . . After a mo-"Is Ben about?"

ment he straightened and smiled "Haven't seen him since dinner. oddly. A look like relief, almost Don't know where he went." Tim Jeffers, just down from camp, entered then.

Fine strength of body healed Ben "Where's Ben at?" he asked Mar-Elliott's wound rapidly. By mid- tin. week he was dressed and sitting be-"I don't know. Miss McManus, fore the fire with Dawn, talking of here, was just asking."

Martin moved to the old table Ben used for a desk.

"Sometimes he leaves a note for dering, Dawn, why you wouldn't let me when he's going away." He bent over the table, looking at the lit-And yet, only a few days ago, you word. . . . Hum. . . . What's this?"

He picked up a slip of paper, and looked at Dawn. "I didn't mean to pry. . .

Probably he's gone to meet you, pointment, though. This is a note for you." "A note! Why, I . . ." Frowning, she took the paper and read:

afternoon-Dawn." "Why!" she cried. "I didn't . . . But I must have!" looking from one to the other. "That's my writing." "Oh!" She let the paper flutter to the floor. "I wrote that! I wrote that years ago!" she cried, struggling to speak distinctly. "I wrote that note for Mr. Brandon. . . . Years ago.

. . How did it get here? Who is calling Ben to the lodge?" "Don't you see?" Martin cried and his voice was thick. "Dawn wrote it, all right. But he's sent it to Ben. . . . It's a decoy! Tim, the lad's on his way to the lodge alone and Brandon's planned it!" No need for more words, then! On went Martin's Jacket. From a told me I must never come again. corner he snatched snowshoes and Why was it, Dawn? Why, when I a pair for Tim. "We'll go," he said to Dawn.

"You tell Buller-" "But I'm going, too!" the girl cried sharply. "I'm going. Oh, hurry. Tim! We may be too late, have to keep still. I love you, Dawn, now!" better than life. Can you believe They crossed the railroad tracks that, when I've seen so little of you? at a run, put on their snowshoes Look at me!"-fiercely. "Don't you and with Jeffers breaking trail, entered the timber. Another had gone that way today, a man whose heart burned and sang. Dawn had sent for nim; Dawn wanted him!

Entering the office while Martin "Yes, yes! It's all wonderful, was in the mill his eyes had enof how it came to be there present-"Why not? It's wonderful, you ed itself. The quick conclusion at lication. It was, in fact, not the say, and yet . . . Can't you ex- which he arrived was that Dawn assortment of jargon that she had and others had gone to Antler expected. "You can't understand, perhaps. Lodge; that was where the shot Sometimes I can't understand my. had been fired which sent Sam Faxself. Always I've wanted to be son to his death. Perhaps Able had loved by . . . by you, Ben Elliott! taken Dawn there. Hastily, he took the house of Lena. At least she

> The distance was a good five ing on the high bank of the Mad

TO BE CONTINUED.

CONFESSIONS

By R. H. WILKINSON @. Bell Syndicate.-WNU Service.

UBELLA HAMPSTEAD is famous writer. Her name is featured in

She has three novels to her credit, and it has been announced that a fourth is to be brought out next

Rubella cannot attribute her achievements to any mysterious or inherited gift. Her fame is the result of hard word and study, of constant, tireless plugging, of the triumph of determination and the will to write of a love for her work, grimness, perseverance and a sense of hu-

In short, Rubella is no natural born genius, no worker of miracles; her rewards are just and well

Some few months ago the good people of Rubella's home town held a reception in honor of their distin-Among those present was one Lena Norman, a newcomer to Maplewood, a woman of some social Unfortunately, however, Lena is an "unknown" writer. She has acquired no fame, has had little success with her literary efforts. And she is inclined to be somewhat bitter about her fate.

Despite the recognized fame of the guest of honor, Lena's regard for Rubella was somewhat skeptical (a skepticism, doubtless, born of envy).

She was, in fact, heard to remark that Rubella had doubtless won her reputation through some sort of drag and was now trading upon the selling power of her name. She even went so far as to suggest that Rubella's "stuff" wasn't so good, when you compared it with real literature, and she probably wouldn't know a good story if she

Of course Lena in no way betrayed this skepticism when Rubella was within earshot.

In fact she was, on the contrary, quite gushy and complimentary. However, as the evening pro gressed and honor after honor was heaped on the smiling Rubella, one watching Lena's face would have noticed that skepticism and bitterness were becoming more and more in evidence.

It was toward the end of the evening that Lena succeeded in getting Rubella alone in a secluded part of the hall.

Said Lena: "My dear, I think your work is wonderful! Really! Every word of it. And I do believe I've read about everything you've had published. And now, my dear, would it be asking too much if I requested a favor?"

Rubella, though certain of the nature of the request, could do naught ter of papers on it. "No, he left no but smile and nod her head and hope that Lena was about to request a favor somewhat different read the single line inscribed on it from the usual run of favors requested of famous authors.

But she was doomed to disap-

"My dear, I know you wouldn't refuse. So sweet of you. The favor is really nothing much. It con-"Meet us at Antler Lodge this cerns a story I have just completed. A short story. It occurs to me that the yarn has some merit, yet I really would appreciate your professional advice before submitting it. Would you mind?"

Ordinarily Rubella would have refused, despite the fact that Lena would doubtlessly have thought her rude and selfish.

But the situation was a little different from ordinary. In the first place, Lena was a fellow-townswoman, her hostess, in a manner of speaking. And in the second place, Rubella saw in Lena's eyes a look that was slightly baffling.

The look somehow resembled challenge.

And so Rubella agreed to read Lena's 'script, though she regretted her decision a moment after it was made. However, the word was spoken and there was no alternative.

The 'script came to Rubelia's hand on the day following, neatly typed, with Lena's name on the by-Rubella glanced over the first few pages with casual indifference. But as she delved into page No.

2 she suddenly sat upright in her chair and read on with renewed in-At the conclusion of the story somewhat puzzled. The story was-actually-a well done piece of work. It merited pub-

Rubella carefully folded the 'script, tucked it in her handbag, caught up a hat and headed for would be honest about her report. Lena received her guest graciously. They sat down together in looked at each other curiously. Said Rubella: "My dear, I have pected to find trash. I-I almost hoped I would. Believe me, I was tremendously surprised. It wasn't the sort of thing I expected to find

Said Lena: "You actually thought the story was good?" "I thought it was fine! Splendid! There is no reason at all why you ter magazines. In fact, if you are willing, I'll handle the placing of it for you."

Lena looked thoughtful.

She gazed through the window. She studied the floor, And at length her eyes came to dwell upon the kind, smiling and friendly countenance of Rubella.

Said Lena: "My dear, you have been honest and fair with me. I, too, have a confession to make. I feel guilty and ashamed. The story that I gave you to read was not written by me. I don't know who the author is. I clipped it haphazardly from a magazine and typed it off before coming to the reception. You see, heretofore I have misunderstood famous authors. I had made the remark that your stuff wasn't so good compared with that of real literary geniuses, and that you probably wouldn't know a good story if you saw one-and I wanted to prove that I was right."

Rubella smiled a gracious smile. "Thank you for telling me. I'm so glad you decided it was the best thing for you to do. For, you see, I knew all the time that your story was a rewrite, and, I'm ashamed to admit, I led you on, hoping you'd let me try and place it for you, I'm so glad it turned out this way. Now I'm sure we can be the best of Lena was frankly aghast. "You knew it all the time! How wonderful! Now I'm positive that I was wrong in remarking that you couldn't tell a good story from a bad one. My dear, I'm thrilled!" "In a way," said Rubella, "I'm thrilled, too, For, you see, the story you clipped haphazardly from the magazine happened to be one of my stories!"

Famous Oregon Ranch Is

Now a Waterfowl Refuge Another area, unprofitable for agriculture, is being restored to the uses of wildlife in this country. The bureau of biological survey has recently completed the acquisition of the famous P-Ranch in Harney county, Oregon. The 64,717-acre area, now known as the Blitzen River Migratory Bird refuge, not only will be important as a sanctuary, but will also be of strategic importance in insuring a water supply for the Lake Malheur Bird refuge, which adjoins it on the north.

Federal acquisition of these lands marks the return to public ownership of an historic area. Bounded on the east by the Steens mountains, on the west by the slopes rising to the Hart mountain, and on the south also by high land, the valley is traversed by the Donner and Blitzen rivers. This stream rises in the Steen mountains and flows west into the south end of the basin, then north into Lake Malheur. As the name suggests, the area is famous for thunderstorms, which are in fact the principal source of the rainfall.

In subsequent years it has been the scene, not only of the resounding storms of the atmosphere, but also has known a "Donner and Blitzen" created by the stormy early settlers. During the years about 1870 amidst gunfights and constant struggle among various exploiters of the public domain, Peter French, locally famous, established his claims to this valley with its Teutonic name and established the P-Ranch which he made the capital of a vast cattle empire. With all the daring and shrewdness that characterized the early land settlers, French not only acquired available public lands, but also consolidated his holdings by taking over those of his rivals. He continued the enlargement of his kingdom up until the time of his death, December 26, 1897, when he was shot by a rival land owner along a boundary fence.

Since the death of the founder of the empire, the P-Ranch has been owned and managed by live stock corporations. The Blitzen river has been dammed to water the vast bottom lands, giant dredges creating ditches for the purpose, and dams being erected at intervals to control the water supply. It has at times constituted one of the greatest hay ranches in the region, and until the recent long-continued drouth was considered a profitable agricultural enterprise. With the sudden decrease in rainfall, however, and with overgrazing, the agricultural usefulness of the area has almost disappeared and at the same Rubella found herself amazed and time the wild life species dependent upon the Blitzen river's flow have been threatened with disaster. The results extended to Lake Malheur, where this once famous area -now a federal refuge- has been almost completely dried up and rendered useless for a time.

The marshy lands, stretching 35 miles back from Lake Malheur, have always been a favorite breeding ground of migratory waterfowl. Millions of ducks and geese have bred there, and a naturalist of the Lena's neat little sitting room and | biological survey counted 120 species of birds nesting on the area. Among these were 100 pairs of the a confession to make. When I rare sandhill cranes. Wildlife other agreed to read your 'script I ex- than birds will also be benefited

OLD SUPERSTITION

If two tea stalks appear on the surface of a cup of tea they are to be placed on the back of the left hand and struck with the back of the right; if they remain unmoved on the left, or adhere to the right, then the loved one will remain true; can't place it with one of the bet- but if one adheres and the other not. she will be false.

BOYS! GIRLS!

Read the Grape Nuts ad in another column of this paper and learn how to join the Dizzy Dean Winners and win valuable free prizes .-- Adv.

Giant Japanese Apples

Apples weighing eight pounds each have been grown by Ichitaro Matsuda, of Nagano, Japan. Although sour, they have a good flavor. Their size is the result of many experi-

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes weak women strong. No alcohol. Sold by druggists in tablets or liquid.—Adv.

Universal Problem

"The 'untouched problem' of human life is-human nature."-Leoner F. Loree, financier.

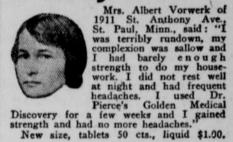

make your garden A SHOW-PLACE

You may be sure your garden will be a real showplace if you plant Ferry's Purebred Flower Seeds. Like produces like, and Ferry's Seeds are selected from perfect plants whose forebears, generation after generation, have produced flowers of remarkable size and color. The Ferry Seed Display Box will help you to choose your favorite varieties.

YOUR NEIGHBORHOOD STORE SELLS THEM IN FRESH DATED PACKETS. -MANY ONLY

A Body Builder

New size, tablets 50 cts., liquid $1.00.

HELP KIDNEYS

IF your kidneys function badly and you have a lame, aching back, with attacks of dizziness, burning, scanty or too frequent urination, getting up at night, swollen feet and ankles, rheumatic pains . . . use Doan's Pills.

Doan's are especially for poorly functioning kidneys. Millions of boxes are used every year. They are recommended the country over. Ask your neighbor!

18 - 35

Excess Acids

NEUTRALIZE

-by chewing one or more Milnesia Wafers Send for one week's liberal supply-FREE SELECT PRODUCTS, Inc., 4402 23rd

Street, Long Island City, New York