A prologue preceding the grand entry will be put on when a group of Scouts and their leader come onto the field and establish a camp as for overnight. As soon as they are settled there appears in the distance an old buckskin pioneer who approaches the camp and hails the Scouts. After an exchange of greetings he questions the right of boys to call themselves Scouts and is told by the Scout leader that he will be shown just what these lads can do. From then on there will be action, fun and demonstrations of skill galore.

There will be all kinds of scout games, out-of-doors skills, signaling in the form of picturesque and dramatic exposition of the history of communication, ranging from the pounding on hollow logs by cavelmen to heliographs and flares such as used for distress signals by ships today.

A safety first tableau will include the wrecking of a village by an artificial storm, after which a group of Scouts will dash on the scene, render first aid to the unfortunate inhabitants, set up a soup kitchen, etc.

Other tableaux will include a "Story of the Stars," "Types of Fires," "Sea Scouting," and "Pioneering." All troops will have entries in a "Parade of Wonders" calculated to put the audience in stitches and give the Scouts a chance to exercise their originality and imagination to the Nth degree.
