HE Cox-Penney wedding this evening will usher in a beautiful innovation, immediately preceding the wedding ceremony. It is the old English custom of candle-lighting and having as many children as possible participate in the ceremony, preferably relatives of the bride.

After the guests have assembled little Fred Penney, jr., will enter, clad in the vestments of the Episcopal church, and carrying a lighted candelabrum, which he will touch to the white-shaded candles placed throughout the rooms, while the sweet strains of Cadman's "At Dawning" is played from the staircase landing by Miss Helen Cook. Then there will be little Mary Mackay of Lincoln, who will carry the ring in the heart of a glorious American Beauty rose, and little Pauline Barber of Fulierton, the flower girl, who will carry a quaint basket of pink rose petals, to be strewn in the path of the bridal procession.

The credit for this quaint and beautiful feature of the ceremony belongs to the bride's mother, Mrs. F. M. Penney, whose mother was a typical Englishwoman and had often spoken of the beautiful wedding ceremonles in England.

The shotguns, according to Dunn's idea, are to be carried in the emergency auto on burglar calls and the like. "A shotgun," said the chief, "is much better than a pistol. The officer has a better chance to get his man without killing him and there is less danger of innocent bystanders or passing citizens being seriously wounded or killed."
