According to the opinion of local railroad men. C. W. Post, the Michigan millienaire residing at Battle Creek, that state, is finding out that a troublesome appendix is an expensive part of the human anatomy.

C. W. Post, be it remembered, so say the press reports, has a bad appendix and speeding across the country from Santa Barbara, Cal., to Rochester, Minn., in a hospital there he is going to have it cut out. At least, the reports say that is his intention. He is making a trip of about 3,100 miles, traveling on a special train, and as the railroad special train is a minimum of $1.75 per mile, the railroad fare alone is costing him at least

J. C. Chisam, assistant general agent here of the Great Western is an old schoolmate of Post. They both attended the same school in Springfield, Ill. Post's father sold agricultural implements and He went over to Battle Creek to take treatment at a sanitarium and the boy, who is now racing across the country, went along. This boy saw money in sending out a line of so-called health foods and started the business in a small way. The output sold on acto be a good money maker. Wealth kept on roiling in and it was not long before C. W. Post was a millionaire. The millions multiplied and now the hiring of a special train is no great drain upon his Reports to the railway's offices here were that Mr. Post was in no immedate danger. Engineers were given orders to carry the train without jolt or jerk. At stations where meals are had, waiters boarded the train with food, served it and alighted at the next station. The train is made up of a pullman for Mr. Post, his physicians and nurses; two tourist sleepers for ballast and a locomotive.

There is talk of building an addition to the present cream house, but there is hardly room enough in the present location at the east end of the passenger train yards. It is possible that a new house may be built omewhere in the west yards, abandoning the old structure.

Dry Battery for an Infernal Machine

Janitors, elevator conductors and watchthrown into a panic yesterday when one of the men, sweeping the floor of the lobby, discovered a small suspicious looking device on the floor behind one of the radiators. With the story of a recent infernal machine murder fresh in his mind, the janitor looked at the object several times, and called to another one of the men to ask what the suspicious looking thing was. It was long and black and had some peculiar brass attachments on one end.

With two sticks, the janitor in terror managed to get the infernal machine out of its position behind the radiator, and then started for the door. His alarm was finally allayed by the elevator conductor, who informed the janitors that the object of their suspicions was not a bomb or an infernal machine, but merely the dry battery from a pocket flashlight, which had been thrown there by workmen who were remodeling the building.

Railroads Putting Many Men Back on the Roadbed Work

With the coming of spring the railron/is are commencing to increase the section forces along the lines and within the next thirty days several thousand men will be given employment in territory ributary to Omaha.

Last fall when winter set in the railroad superintendents had their roadbeds in perfect condition and when the ground froze up, there was no necessity for carrying full crews on the sections. As a esult The gangs were reduced from the normal-six to eight men-to two and the boss. They ran along like this during the winter. Now with the ground thawed out, the necessity of increasing the forces up to the summer maximum becomes apparent and the men are being put to work. This rule applies on all the roads radiating from Omaha.
