EMIL BRANDEIS' FATE IS TOLD

Traveling Companion Recounts Sinking of Ill-Fated Titanic.

OMAHAN DIES LIKE A HERO

When the Last Boat is Lowered the Merchant Prince Was Standing at the Rail of the Doomed Liner.

C. E. H. Stengle of the firm of Stengle & Rothchild, New York, one of the survivors of the Titanic and a traveling companion of Emil Brandeis, says Omaha's merchant prince went down with the ocean liner denying himself a chance to be saved, in order that women could be snatched from the deep.

Mr. Stengle is in Omaha on business, and when seen said Mr. Brandeis and six others were playing cards in the drawing room when the Titanic struck. Mr. Stengle was an onlooker. After the crash Mr. Stengle did not see Emil Brandeis again. However, since then he has heard through George Naden of Philadelphia, who was also with Mr. Brandeis, that the latter was standing at the railing when the last boat was lowered.

Emil Brandeis and Mr. Stengle were with each other almost constantly from the first day out.

Men Turned Away.

When the boats were lowered away with the women aboard the men turned away from the railing. After the last boat had been dropped Mr. Stengle said he turned away, and, not thinking what he was doing, but knowing that he was gone, strolled down the deck toward the bow, which was rapidly sinking. He says he don't know what prompted him to go that way, as the safer place was in the stern, which was up in the air. However, he strolled down to the bow, where he saw a boat. He asked if he could get in and some one told him to jump. He crawled up on the railing and rolled over, landing on his side in the boat.

"In the same boat with him was Lady Duff-Gordon, Mrs. Duff-Gordon and seven or eight others. He said he took one of the oars and with Sir Duff-Gordon, and two sailors rowed for eight hours before they were picked up by the Carpathia. Once while they were rowing, he said, Lady Duff-Gordon put her head on her arms and said to her husband, "Carl, I know we are going to be saved. I can feel it. I see a boat coming our way and it is coming fast. It knows what has happened and I know we are going to be saved." This was said by Lady Duff-Gordon several hours before they were picked up.

Four Explosions Heard.

When the lifeboat had moved about half a mile from the sinking Titanic he said he saw the last row of porthole lights sink below the water. A few seconds later four explosions occurred at intervals of about one second. Then the stern of the Titanic sprang itself and shot into the water, while the screams and cries of the stricken men and women filled the air. In the words of Mr. Stengle, "These screams were such that ten years of any man's life was taken away in that one minute. He said he was one of three married men on board who was able to join his wife on the Carpathia. His wife was lowered away in the first boat.

He said when the last boat was lowered away with Mrs. Henry Harris in it, she looked up and waved to Brandeis. Mr. Brandeis waved back, and then turned away and waited for death.

Island in Isolation.

"According to Mr. Stengle, J. Bruce Ismay was in the very first boat which left the Titanic. When he arrived on the Carpathia he confined himself to his stateroom, where he had his cigars, drinks and meals brought to him and never did he leave the room to visit among the poor unfortunates on the deck, who were moaning the loss of their fathers, mothers, wives, sweethearts, sisters and brothers. Mr. Stengle said he and the other men who were saved went among the women and children on the Carpathia and comforted them and when they arrived in New York, carried them to their homes, where they were taken care of until they were able to travel.

WILL SELL ROBBER'S EFFECTS

Parents of Dead Highwayman Cannot Locate Bank Deposits.

BELIEVED TO HAVE WEALTH

Reynold's Father Says His Wayward Son Wrote that He Had Large Deposits in Several Western Banks.

Thousands of dollars, which his poor father and other heirs never will receive, were left behind by Edgar C. Reynolds, successful burglar, bank robber and "road agent" or highwayman, who was shot to death while trying to escape from police officers in Omaha on January 23, this year.

For a considerable period of years Reynolds practiced his criminal professions in the northwest, operating in North and South Dakota, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, Washington and other states. He saved his money, depositing it in many banks. His heirs do not know in what banks the deposits were placed, nor the assumed names under which Reynolds deposited them. They have not the means to employ detectives to procure this information.

Reynolds' personal effects, found in his pockets after his death, will be sold at public auction in the Agricultural Society exhibit room in the county building next Thursday morning. They are believed to be worth about $1,000, though they have been appraised at a much lower figure. Among them are the following:

One pair of diamond earrings, three diamond eardrops, five smaller unset diamonds, two unset rubies, one ruby ring, one ruby stud, one cross and chain, one-half of a diamond locket, one diamond and pearl brooch, one diamond stick-pin, one pair of diamond cuff buttons.

Shot by Officers.

Last January the janitor of an Omaha public school building opened the principal's office one morning to find Reynolds asleep on the couch. In each hand the sleeping man held a revolver. The janitor called the police. Two officers awakened Reynolds. He fought like a madman, wrestled himself free, leaped through the window and sped away, the officers in hot pursuit. Revolver shots brought Reynolds down. He died almost instantly. The belief always has been that Reynolds had come to Omaha to visit relatives after years of wandering and had gone insane.

Julius W. Reynolds, the robber's father, who lives at the county hospital, says his son in past years wrote to him of making deposits in banks in the northwest. He believes he must have left at least $10,000 scattered among the banks.

To M. G. MacLeod, administrator of Reynolds' estate, one banker has admitted the probability of Reynolds having deposits in his bank, but he says he does not know and there is no way of making sure.

POLICE TO ARREST ALL WHO BURN LEAVES ON STREETS

Eighteen men, constituting two extra gangs, have been placed in different parts of the city by Street Commissioner Kugel with instructions to clear all highways of leaves. Numerous fires have been reported recently as having resulted from burning of these leaves. The chief of police, aiding Mr. Kugel in keeping streets clean and minimizing the danger, has ordered the ordinance prohibiting burning of leaves in the streets on pavements strictly enforced.

SCHOOL BOARD TO FINISH PAYING FOR BUILDINGS

At the meeting of the Board of Education Monday night the final estimates on the work of erecting the new wing at the High school and the Castellar building will be allowed. The Castellar building has been completed at a total approximate cost of $5,000. The three wings of the high school, now finished, have cost, on original estimates, a total of $74,539.90, as follows: East wing, $190,711.95; south wing, $174,832.34; north wing, $239,995. On the high school about $2,190 of the original estimate remains unpaid and there is about $4,000 extra to be paid for. The Castellar building will be clear of incumbrance when $1,200 is allowed.
