December Magazines

Harper's for December contains the first paper of "The Quest in the Arctic" by Viljar Stefansson. Lillian Nicolson gives her recollections of Rubinstein. W. D. Howells has an article on "Kordova, and the Way There," and Walter Pritchard Eaton writes of "Neighbors in the Winter Night." There is another installment of the novel, "The Judgment House," by Herbert Parker; short stories by Mark Twain, Margaret Cameron, Percival Gibbon, Vale Dornie, Norman Duncan, Alice Brown and Horacio Fish. Richard Le Gallienne contributes "Children in Fiction," and poems by Thomas Hardy, Charles Hanson Towne, Arva MacKay, Pauline Brooks Quinton and E. S. Martin complete the number.

The Christmas number of the Century has short stories by Lucy Furman, Virginia Yeaman Remnitz and Louise Herrick. "Lord's Spiritual in Jerusalem," tells readers of the peculiar conditions of Christian worship in the Holy Land, and "After-the-War Series" has to do with the impeachment of Andrew Johnson. General Harrison Grey Otis outlines the causes of the attempt to "recall" Johnson and General John B. Henderson, contributes a series of personal reminiscences of Lincoln and the leaders of the first few after-the-war years. Edith Rickert continues her analysis of the effect of fraternities on college girls. Jacob A. Rits discusses the evolution of the New York university. Violet Calvert's color illustrations of Dante's Divine Comedy, and frontispiece by Mary Greene Blumenschein and a wood engraving by Cole are among the art features.

In Scribner's for December, Price Collier's second paper on "Germany and the Germans" deals with political parties and the press. "Christian Baptism" contributes an article on "Scandinavian Painters of Today," and Birge Harrison in "The Field of Art," discusses subjects for the painter in American scope. Thomas Nelson Page's story, "The Stable of the Inn" reproduces the nativity in the language of an actual narrative of today. There is another installment of John Fox's serial, "The Heart of the Hills," and short stories by Albert Krimm, Alice Brown, Mrs. Belle Lowndes, Gordon Arthur Smith and Gerald Chittenden.

The leading article in the Atlantic Monthly is a discussion of "The Drift Toward Government Ownership of Railways," by B. L. Winchell, president of the "Prison House." Charles Eliot Norton contributes another installment of the "Letters of Friendship." John Mair continues the story of his boyhood, Gamaliel Bradford, Jr., contributes a confederate portrait of James Longstreet, an attack on present-day methods of department store advertising by Elizabeth C. Billings, a discussion of the philosophy which underlies the labor unions by Wilbur M. Urban, and an essay by Elizabeth Taylor, entitled, "The Valley of the Others."

"Exploring Other Worlds" is the new series that begins in the World's Work for December. "Adventures on the Frontiers of Science" is its subtitle, and William Bayard Hale, its author, describes the first article as "Discoveries Among the Stars." R. F. Yoakim has a paper on "The High Cost of Selling," Samuel P. Orth's second article of "The Battle Line of Labor" includes a description of a crew of professional strike-breakers. Mabel Daggett Rice has an article on "Building a Better Race," and Lieutenant George F. Waugh tells of a journey made across Alaska in midwinter.

Lippincott's opens with a novel, "The Glimmer Glass," by Augusta Kopprecht, and short stories that breathe of the holiday season are "A Christmas Blessing" by Harriet Prescott Spofford; "The Woman at the Door," by John Nicholas Belfell; "Two-Tails," by Owen Oliver, and "Mercy's Goodness," by Ellis O. Jones. Lucy Copinger contributes "Gris Is Pierce," while Temple Bailey is responsible for a clever and touching little tale, entitled, "Grandma." Then there is another "Short Story," "Masterpiece," the third of the Russian series, "A Long Exile," by Tolstol.

The Christmas number of Life is one of the few numbers of the year that takes longer than half an hour to read. In fact, to read every line of it and to examine the pictures as closely as they ought to be examined is a pleasant task. The touch of color in the inside pages adds a variety and it is not carried too far. On the whole, this is the best Christmas number of Life that we have ever seen.

The National Review for December contains the usual "Episodes of the Month," and features an article by Lord Roberts on "National Service." W. R. Lawson writes on "Points for the Wireless Committee." The Triple Entente and the Present Crisis, E. Cone Cornford has a paper on "Home Rule and Civil War," and Lady Dilloughby De Broke tells of "The Pros and Cons of Domestic Service."

The December Red Book contains the usual photographic art studies with short stories by Richard Washburn Child, Julius Grinnell Futhmann, Wallace Irwin, Harris Merton Lyon, Edward Lyell Fox, Owen Oliver, Frederick R. Bockdoff, Ida M. Evans, Charles Neville Buck, John Barton O'Neil, John Haeletta, Edwin Palmer, Griffling Marrott, J. L. Beaton, Minnie Barbour Adams, Freeman Tilden and Louis V. De Foa.

The Christmas Ainslee's opens with a novelette by Eleanor Merlen Kelly, "Toys the Unlike," and among contributors of short stories are: Jeffery Farwell, Anna Alice Chapin, Horacio Fish, Nalbro Bartley, F. Berkeley Smith, Anne Warwick, L. A. R. Wylie, and Martha McCullough-Whitman. There is the usual review of plays and players and new books.

The Metropolitan contains stories by W. W. Jacobs, Melville Davison Post, Henry C. Rowland and Henry Miller Ridgway. Arnold Bennett contributes the second of a series of articles on "The Case of the Plain Man." Peter Clark Macfarlane has a paper on "The United States Steel Corporation." Morris Hillquit writes of socialism in the United States. W. J. Ghem gives his views of the work of the Sixty-second congress, and Montrose J. Moses on "The Advance Guard of British Dramatists."

The leading articles in the December issue of the North American Review are devoted to the situation in the Balkans under the titles "The War in the Balkans" and "An American View." Prof. Irving Fisher contributes a paper on "Is the High Cost of Living Going Higher?" and John Burroughs discusses the contentions of Prof. Schafar in regard to "The New Vitalism." The concluding paper by Gabriel Hanotiaux, the eminent French historian, offers many reasons for a closer relationship between North America and France. Ellen Burns Sherman has a very suggestive essay on "The Evolution of Prayer." J. P. Collins records two interesting personal interviews in "Conversations with George Meredith."

H. Rider Haggard commences a new story in the December Strand entitled "Smith and the Pharaohs." Arthur Morrison, P. St. Mars, Austin Phillips, C. C. Andrews and E. Nesbit also contribute stories. Mary Shaw, the actress, discusses amusingly on the subject of "Stage Hamlets," while T. C. Bridges contributes an article on "Record-Breaking Run Riot." Herbert Du Pareq writes on "The Early Days of the British Chancellor of the Exchequer" and pays a tribute to the genius of England's foremost statesman, Lloyd George.

In the December issue of the Wide World Magazine Jules Legrand describes "A Gorilla Hunt in Equatorial Africa." Herman Scheffauer gives a description of San Francisco's open-air theater and Nichol Lee tells of an exciting visit which he paid some time ago to our western "China Town." "A Battle with Bees" is a narrative by Frederick Lees. Clifford Halles account of how he took a motor car to King Menzies, a town in Nevada, like a romance by Rider Haggard and "Two Years in the Kulu Valley" by E. A. Joseph, describes a little known but highly attractive section of India.

Everybody's features the second installment of Thomas Lawson's "The Remedy." Leo L. Redding writes on "King Coal and his Court," S. H. Wolfe has a paper on "Human War and Tear," and Clayton Hamilton contributes the review of plays. Short stories are by Vance Thompson, Talbot Mundy, Virginia Rodwick and Inez Thompson, and there is another installment of the serial, "The Case of Jennie Brice," by Mary Roberts Rinehart. The usual review of books and "Under the Spreading Chestnut Tree," complete the number.

McClure's for December opens with a novel, "My Little Sister," by Elizabeth Robins, Owen Johnson's "The Sixty-first Second," and Jeffery Farwell's "An Amateur Gentleman," are continued, and there are short stories by Samuel Merwin, Helen Van Campen, Maravene Kennedy Thompson and Hugh Johnston. Burton J. Hendrick writes on "Insurance for Workingmen." Alfred Henry Lewis continues his story of a New York policeman, Bennett Mussen and Robert Grau have an article telling of the fortunes in moving picture films and Willa Sibert Cather contributes a poem, "Prairie Spring."

The Christmas number of the American comes out in its new form, and contains the second installment of "The Friendly Road," by David Grayson; and short stories by Harris Merton Lyon, Henry Oyen, Welford Beaton and Mary Brecht Pulver. Arnold Bennett's novel, "The Regent," begins in this number, and Frank Barkley Copley tells of "The Impeachment of President Lincoln." Walter Richard Easton has an article on "The Theater," and Ida M. Tarbell writes of the work of one of the reformatories for women in New York. The cover design is by Angus Macdonald, and is especially good.

The Christmas number of Country Life in America is the finest issue ever published of that magazine. The special features, both literary and artistic, are of the highest standard. Among the authors are Jacob A. Rits and Ernest Thompson Seton; among the contributing artists, Dugald Stewart Walker, William L. Jacobs, Charles Livingston Bull and J. C. Leyendecker.

The Christmas number of the London Graphic contains "No Christmas," by K. L. Montgomery; "An Intellectual Friendship," by Hon. Norah Cavendish; "The Phantom Troika," by W. Almer-Stark; "The Girl at the Gate," by H. Devere Staepole, and "The Matchmaker," by Arthur Eckersley. "A Lesson in Geography," by W. A. Mackenzie, and "Jan's Courtship," by H. M. Brock, are illustrated jingles. The illustrations are especially attractive and the number is bound in a striking colored cover by Frank Craig.

The Illustrated London News contains illustration from "Gulliver's Travels" in color; there are four color plates from paintings by Edmund Dulac, which are especially attractive, and the whole number permeates the Christmas spirit, both in illustration and story. A tale by O. Henry, "Christmas by Injunction" has the lead, and "The Good St. James," by Nella Syrett is equally interesting. The supplement plate, "Whose Turn First," is by Arthur J. Ealey.

Holly Leaves, the Christmas number of the London Sporting and Dramatic News, contains illustrated stories by Edon Philpotts, Harry Palm, Maarten Martins, P. H. Townsend, Richard Harding Davis and others, and there are many full-page illustrations of Christmas themes. A colored plate of Nelson's "Last Signal at Trafalgar" comes with the magazine, which is bound in gold and colors.

"Save Christmas," writes Margaret Bazan in the December Harper's Bazar. Entertainment is the keynote of the number, beginning with "Coming Back to Christmas" by Zona Gale; "Florida Lee" is a story of love and smiling mystery by Alice Brown, and "Something on Her Mind" is a love story of a girl, her sweetheart and her aunts, by Mary E. Wilkins. "The Glory of Opportunity" begins the story of one girl's achievements, told simply and touchingly by the girl herself. Color printing and full-page illustrations include "The Message of the Violets," "Gauguin," "Embarrassment of Riches" by Jessie Wilcox Smith; "We Three Kings from Orient Are," by Welsh, Dr. Eliot writes a Christmas message to the coming generation, which he calls "Marry Young." Edith M. Thomas contributes "Christmas is for Children," a poem. "The Prayer of the Women" is by Inez Haynes Gillmore. There are separate articles, illustrated, about gifts and how to make, buy and offer them to the best advantage.

WEAD IS ARRESTED FOR OBSTRUCTING AN ALLEY. F. D. Wead, real estate dealer and member of the Water board, was arrested on a warrant charging him with obstructing an alley. Wead is charged with having the alley in the rear of his office at Eighteenth and Farnam streets littered with rubbish and ashes.

VEGETABLES ARE PLENTIFUL

All Sorts of Green Stuff May Be Had on the Omaha Market.

ARE REASONABLE IN PRICE, TOO. Eggs Are Still Going Down and a More Decided Decline is Predicted—Butter Also Makes a Slight Drop.

The vegetable need not worry because winter has come for the markets now have as many varieties of vegetables as in the summer time and all are reasonably priced. Radishes, carrots, green onions and other small garden truck may be bought for 4 and 5 cents a bunch. Bermuda onions are 5 cents a pound. Brussels sprouts are 15 cents a pound. Cauliflower is 7 1/2 cents and cabbage 1 cent a pound. Cucumbers are 15 cents a piece. Head lettuce is 15 cents a head. Fresh tomatoes are priced the same per pound and grape fruits are a nickel each. Green peppers are three on a dime and sprouts is 15c a pound. Eggs are still going down. A drop of 1 cent a dozen was recorded during the week on the wholesale price and grocers say a further decline is inevitable. A Klug, manager of Hayden Bros. grocery department, predicts that eggs will be down to 15 cents a dozen by the middle of January. The New York storage houses now have 1,500,000,000 eggs on hand and fresh eggs keep coming in he says. Butter also dropped off a half cent on the wholesale price during the week. Good butter may be had for 28 and 30 cents a pound now. Some Christmas groceries will remain the same in price through the holidays. Chamberlains are 7 1/2 cents a pound. Mixed nuts are 15 cents a pound. Chestnuts are 12 1/2 cents a pound. Shelled popcorn is priced at 5 cents a pound. Hubbard squashes are 10 cents each. Huge oranges may be bought at 40 cents a dozen. All kinds of apples are $1.00 a bushel. Sweet cider is 35 cents a gallon—with the jug.

BURLINGTON BRIDGE NEAR SCHUYLER BURNED

SCHUYLER, Neb., Dec. 12.—(Special.)—A pile-driver set fire to the Burlington bridge near here today, destroying a large portion of the frame work. The in-bound passenger train is held up on the other side and it will be twenty-four hours at least before the bridge can be put in shape for traffic. One of the construction men lost his balance while putting the fire out and fell into the Platte river and was nearly drowned before assistance reached him.
