NEBRASKA LAWYERS HERE FOR TWO DAYS

Sixty members attended the session yesterday afternoon. Frank B. Kellogg, known as the "trust buster," is to be present today and is to address the association. The association will hold a banquet this evening at 7 o'clock at the Hotel Home.
Redick Delivers His Address.
President William A. Redick of the association in the opening address took for his subject "Some Popular Errors Regarding the Courts and the Administration of Justice." He called attention to the many criticisms directed by the public against the courts and legal procedure and held that most of the popular errors in the minds of the public owe their existence to a lack of adequate information as to the basic principles of representative government and on account of this there is an inability to comprehend the well defined lines which limit and distinguish the three departments of representative government. He said that this might be accounted for by the sort of commercial mania with which we are possessed at the present time.
"Much could be accomplished, however," he said, "if the better education of the masses upon governmental questions, if the many learned articles written for the lay magazines were put into attractive form and distributed among the people at large."
He pointed out the multiplication of laws as one of the greatest evils of modern legislation. He then called attention to the idea prevalent among all classes that the rule of law announced by a court must relate back to some statute or other positive enactment for its foundation and showed that this idea gave rise to the frequent criticism that the judges are making the law, while in the next breath the popular mind demands that the judges should favor their decisions with the condition of popular sentiment.
He called attention to the evils of class legislation and said there was a tendency for the interests to expect legislation of the majority and in the interest of certain people instead of in the interest of the whole people. "Witness the demand," he said, "of the labor organizations to be exempted from the definition of trusts within the provision of the Sherman act; in other words, these organizations demand the right to do what other trusts are prohibited from doing."
The speaker made a lengthy defense of technicalities pointing out that the difference between 100 pounds of steam in a boiler and 101 pounds of steam is apparently insignificant, but may be disastrous if the engineer disagrees it.
Going further on to the discussion of popular opinion and the criticisms that arise from it the president said: "The catchword of the times is 'progressive' and no man, no idea, no institution which does not bear that label, whether justly or unjustly, is entitled to any consideration at the hands of the people. And having set up this god as an objective of their worship, popular sentiment, or more properly speaking, those who assume to mold public opinion, put upon trial all of the existing instrumentalities of government. Which mind you, have stood the test of over a century, and under which this country has become the greatest nation in the world, and then condemn them only on the score of age. They assert that only the new is worth while, and believed that they have discovered another Moses in any man who advocates any change in the institutions, however radical it may be."
Courts Are Progressive.
"And they say the courts are not progressive—that they are still deciding cases under old laws, forgetting, as they say, that the same old laws were adopted by themselves and remain in force only by their consent; that they are still consulting old decisions, forgetting again that all progress must of necessity be founded on a knowledge of the past. The decisions of a lawsuit is a serious study, yet who would attempt the mastery of any subject without a knowledge of its history and what has been written upon it by earlier investigators?"
The speaker said "the initiative and referendum, the recall, the recall of judges, the recall of decisions and the control of courts in the decision of applications for injunctions are all distinct attacks upon representative government. They are not reformatory; they are revolutionary."
Further in the discussion of the criticisms directed at the courts he said: "It must be conceded there are rogues on the bench and rogues at the bar, but are there not rogues in medicine, hypocrisy in the ministry and crooks in merchandising? The judiciary, however, standing as it does and should, as the highest expression of a God-fearing and law-abiding people, and called upon to exercise powers resembling those divine should exhibit less of weakness common to the race, and those men only who stand above their fellows in moral strength should be entrusted with those powers."

SWIFT HAS OWN INSURANCE

ing to find out if an employee is entitled to compensation outside the act," said Mallory.
"Half Avail Themselves."
In Massachusetts only 50 per cent of the employees have availed themselves of the law. Insurance companies there have tried to put the law in disrepute by making outside protective insurance lower than the insurance under the compensation law.
"The Washington law only covers hazardous occupation and it is doubtful if a clerk, for example, sent into a factory and injured there can recover."
Mallory said the maximum of $4,000 in case of death, embodied in the majority bill of the Nebraska commission, is too high and suggested not more than $5,000 or $4,000.
Others who appeared before the commission were Joseph Laux, representing the building trades, H. H. Claiborne, P. E. Barnhorst, representing the Standard Stock Food company, and H. Howland, a lumber dealer of South Omaha.
Mr. Laux said the employee ought to receive 75 per cent of his salary during disability and in case of death his family ought to receive that amount all the time.
Views on the Printing.
Samuel Rees of the Rees Printing company, F. A. Kennedy, publisher of the Western Laborer, Harry Stroesser, representing the building trades, and Robert Z. Drake of the Standard Bridge company appeared before the commission at its afternoon session.
Mr. Kennedy said his only desire was to see the "fellow way down below" helped by some law.
Mr. Stroesser favored a $5,000 minimum death liability and an accident liability of at least 65 per cent of the salary of the employee.
"I object to workmen's compensation in its entirety," said Mr. Drake, who is fighting the law in the state of Washington. He said it was a charity and ought to be conducted as a charity, although there was no necessity for charity.
Mr. Drake said that during the twelve years of his work as an employer of labor in several states he had never had but one suit started against him. He said he was always glad to pay any employee when that employee suffered an injury in his employment.
In the Lumber Camps.
"I am my employer's friend and they are my friends. They are honorable men and will not accept charity."
"My lumber camps in Washington men have made a rule that nobody is employed there or will work with them who has accepted charity from the county or state. It is un-American. If you encroach on the rights of the employer it is but a step to encroachment upon the rights of the employee."
Members of the commission said all employers were not so generous toward their employees and it was for the protection of the men working for other employers that the Nebraska law was designed.
Mr. Drake said some of them would need such protection probably, but the only law he would favor was one that would give the employer and the employee a right to settle their own disagreements or injury cases.
At 4 o'clock the commission adjourned its public session to take up a private discussion. Mr. Drake was invited to come again and further discuss his views on workmen's compensation.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Dec. 27.—Unwilling, he said, to return to Indianapolis to spend the holidays with his aged mother, with a fugitive from justice, William B. Adams of that city, confessed to Chief of Police Griffin here that five years ago he had broken parole in East St. Louis after perjury himself to save a younger brother from the penitentiary. "I fled, chief, to establish an alibi for my brother, who was tried on a larceny charge," he said. "The lawyers tripped up and not only my brother went to prison, but the judge sentenced me to one to fourteen years for perjury. He paroled me, but when it became known around the railroad office where I worked as clerk that I had reported to the court every week, I couldn't stand it and fled. I have since worked steadily in San Francisco and other Pacific coast cities and had written my mother in Indianapolis I would return for New Year's. I have fought my conscience away from home, but I couldn't face my mother."
