"I WILL take all of the groom's salary paying for silver polish," was the facetious remark I heard at a wedding last season as the guests were admiring the wonderful array of silver gifts. I thought of this remark as I read the following article on high cost of living in the Yale Review:

"In the eighteenth century silver was scarce and high, notwithstanding the quantities of antique silver now offered for sale. In colonial days a teaspoon was scarcely larger than the after-dinner coffee spoon of today, and as few families had more than one or two, the lady who would take tea with her neighbor carried her spoon in her reticule. Today the ordinary every-day bride expects to receive a chest with a dozen each of fifteen varieties of spoons, eleven of forks, six of knives, a set of tongs, and two varieties of picks, thirty-five dozen, or 420 pieces; to this must be added not less than sixty-four service pieces, or a total of 484 pieces of flat silver, as it is called, and only the latest and most painstaking of June brides can be quite certain of the real latent of all of them. It costs us more yearly to take care of the silver we now get than it cost our grandmothers to buy all they really needed."

Officer Chapman Helps Out Woman Who is Distressed

Traffic Policeman Charles Chapman, station at Sixteenth and Howard streets, wears a No. 14 shoe and has a heart as big as his foot. Thursday a woman came up to him and asked where she could pawn a watch. She explained that she was going to Los Angeles and had lost all her money and was hungry. Chapman directed her to a pawnshop, but the pawnbroker, scenting an easy victim, would not give her reasonable value for the timepiece. She returned to Chapman and he bought her something to eat and gave her enough money to telegraph for funds. The woman said she was the wife of a saloon keeper and promised to return the money upon her arrival. "I think she will, too," said Chapman. "Anyway, I'll take a chance on being stung once."
