GREENHAGEN IN FIRST PLACE

Wins in the Y. M. C. A. Public School Garden Contest.

TAKES DOWN VALUABLE PRIZES

Central Park School Takes First Place Among Clubs, with Sherman and Lothrop Tied for Second.

Louis Greenhagen, 11 years of age, son of Henry Greenhagen, 3943 Martha street, and a pupil at Dupont school, took first honors and the title of master gardener in the exhibition and judging of vegetables raised by the boys of the Young Men's Christian Association Public School Gardening club.

For Second Place. The next best winner in the contests were Henry Vollmer, 4223 North Forty-second street; John Looker, 4223 Saratoga street; Allen Houck, 5231 North Sixteenth street; Clarence Adams, 1134 South Thirtieth avenue; Howard Woerner, 2931 Pratt street; Eddie Sydow, 1915 South Forty-eighth street. They all tied for second place, each taking three prizes, and each also receives a year's membership in the association, as well as a big cash prize.

The Commercial club donated $50 for use as prize money, and its members fostered the project by personal visits to the boys' gardens. H. S. Flower and J. J. Somerville of the association were in charge, and over 1,500 lbs. made gardens. They were organized according to the schools they attended.

Central Park school took first place among the clubs, with thirteen prizes won by its members. Park school was second, with twelve, while Sherman and Lothrop schools tied for third place with nine prizes each.

Fifteen big tables, covered with radishes, beets, and onions, comprised the exhibit of produce raised by the boys. There were 600 exhibits, made by 200 boys. The beets were the best ever raised in any contest conducted by the association, some of them bigger than a man's fist. Of course, the onions made a strong showing, almost making the association smell like a Dutch bunch.

William Lonsager, former president of the Douglas County Agricultural society, judged the exhibits with the aid of August Froehnow of Florence.

Sells-Floto Circus and Buffalo Bill Are Coming

Col. William Frederick Cody (Buffalo Bill) and some of the Indians of the Sells-Floto Circus

Fashions in hats change—and so why shouldn't the same rule apply to circuses? Little Tommy may answer. Stand up, please. Thank you.

Wrong. Exceedingly wrong. To tell the truth there's nothing which must shift about more than the fashions of a circus—or at least the styles of its entertainment. Of course the groundwork may remain the same, there may still be clowns, and tents, and seats, and all that sort of thing, for those things are necessary to the development just as cloth is necessary for clothing. As to the explanation:

Once upon a time the clown song was a real part of a circus. But the clown song is gone now. Then there were the "leaps" by which the performers entered the ring, but the leaps have departed with the clown song. There was, too, the "entree," where the audience saw beforehand all the performers it would see later on in various acts. And then there was the Wild West—as a whole entertainment.

But even that has changed now—and the best evidence of it all is in the exhibition of the Sells-Floto Circus and Buffalo Bill (himself), which is coming to Omaha for a one-day stay, Tuesday, June 23. The spectacle has taken its place.

When Buffalo Bill became a part of the Sells-Floto Circus this year, with his Indians, and soldiers, and riders, and ropers, and all the other features which go to make the depiction of the west, there came many a conference between those upon whom devolves the task of making a circus popular. The straight Wild West entertainment was discarded. The west should be displayed and epitomized, they were sure of that, but the old system must not be followed. And so there came the idea of the pageant or spectacle.

So now it comes about that in allegorical fashion the whole history of the west is shown, from the time of the frontier to that of the present day. The early struggles of the pioneers, the hatred of the Indians, the wild life of the plain—this is brought forth in an entirely new light, so that history may be combined with entertainment. And, naturally, it is all included in the usual general admission of 25 cents, which the circus has always charged. Rough riders? They will be there, of course, and Indians, and soldiers, and ropers, and ranch girls—but every performer has some specific thread of a great story to follow. The scheme of a mere jumble of events to make an entertainment has vanished. Fashions in circuses have changed.

Of course, Buffalo Bill is to appear in the performance. He also is to lead the parade when it passes through the downtown streets at 10:30 o'clock the morning of the performance. The circus is to exhibit here at Twenty-first and Paul streets.

CANDIDATE FOR CARNEGIE HERO MEDAL

JIM RICE. POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., June 20.—Single-handed, Jim Rice, coach of the Columbia variety crews, rescued two unidentified Italians from drowning recently opposite the Columbia boathouse at Clearwater. The two men had been swimming, when one of them was seized with cramps, the other who went to his aid was pulled under with him. Rice heard their cries and hurriedly put out after the men, reached them just after they had gone under the second time. He brought them to shore, but had to work over one of them for two hours with first aid remedies. His friends are working to get a Carnegie hero medal for his bravery.

Baraca Class Wins From the Philatheas

The Baraca Sunday school class of the Dietz Memorial church enjoyed a banquet last night at the expense of the Philatheas class of the same church, due to the victory of the Baraca class in a Sunday school contest which has been progressing during the last six weeks. The contest started the first Sunday in April with attendance, collection, new members, visitors, church attendance and Epworth league attendance counting in the final markins for winner. About forty were present to enjoy the banquet and the impromptu toasts which followed. Dr. E. L. Franz was toastmaster and he called on the following for talks: Floyd Shepherd, "Old Hand Remarks"; Noble Workman, "Response"; H. L. Goodheart, "Baraca"; Marie Ammann, "Philatheas"; Mr. Beaton, "Hand in Hand With the Philatheas"; Florence McHale, "To the Men"; Rev. C. N. Dawson, "Baraca and Philatheas to the Church."
