The summer widower is with us again, and a jolly good chap he is. He stays at home and sweaters during the warm weather to see that business goes merrily on, and that wife and children may have a comfortable good time in a cooler climate and forget the worries of house-keeping. If he happens to pick up a party of friends and takes them motoring, the next door neighbors are pretty sure to let the wife know that he is not having such a poor time. But the wife understands, for the next season she goes away just the same, and the children have a good vacation before starting to school in the fall.

The country club helps the summer-widower and most any afternoon you will find him on the golf links and later dining on the cool screened porches of the club. A. V. Kinler has probably the longest term of "widowhood." Mrs. Kinler is spending the summer in Europe with Miss Mary Munchhoff, and does not return until October 1. Preston.
