The marquis of Lansdowne, the Unionist leader, reiterated that nothing short of the Unionist amendments could avert the immediate peril that was threatening. He said this was his explanation of the demand for the total exclusion of the province of Ulster and he complained that the government had given the Unionists no assistance whatever in the task of averting civil war.

At the suggestion of the marquis of Crewe, the bill was read a third time without a vote being taken.

that they would not accept arbitration of their wage differences under the Erdman act, but would continue negotiations with their employers. It was also announced that the ffremen and engineers had voted almost unanimously in favor of a strike should their requests be refused by the railroads. The announcement that federal arbitration would be declined came after a meeting attended by the conference of seneral managers of the railroads and epresentatives of the employer.

The railroad managers wars informed by W. S. Stone, head of the Brotherhood Locomotive Engineers, and W. S Carter, president of the Brotherhood of motive Firemen and Enginemen of the result of the strike vote.

Different phases of the differences beween the men and the railroads were iscussed before the conference adjourned. Refusal to accept arbitration was based by the brotherhood on the contention that the railroads would not be bound by the result of such arbitration. On this point an official statement given out by Mr. Carter reads: "On the supposition that the federal
