The dealer who is looking for an agency contract will find here the representatives of thirty or forty tractor manufacturers with whom he can talk business. If he is already handling a given brand of machine he can review its merits and increase his confidence in his article.

There will be plenty of representatives of the various machines and tractors on the ground to answer the questions farmers, dealers and others have to ask. There is plenty of ground on which the demonstrations can be given. Great acres of stubble land have been leased for the purpose. Here the soil will be rolled over at the rate of hundreds of acres a day by the many large tractors that will be draw.

ing great gang plows. Interested in Tractors.

There are thousands of farmers in the state with only 160 acres or even smaller farms to care for. Even these are becoming more and more interested in the tractors. Time was a few years ago when it was thought the big tractors belonged only on the great wheat farms in Dakota and Minnesota. That time is past. The tractors are finding their place on the smaller farms now and because they can be used in so many capacities on a farm they are finding greater and greater favor among the small as well as among the larger farmers. The small farmer who is just through harvesting his crop of small grain and plowing his corn feels that he has done a good big summer's work. He looks over his horses. They are all run down and thinned out in the flank. They need a rest. It means money to give them a rest, for horseflesh is valuable. But there is a lot of fall plowing to be done. It just must be done, for that is the making of next year's corn crop. His Next Step. What can he do?

Well, one of the first things he can do with profit is to go to Fremont during the tractor demonstration and see the many uses to which the tractor can be put. He can see the rapidity with which these tractors roll the sod and the stubble over. He can see how it would save his horseflenh. He can price the tractors, and then he can do some figuring.

It won't hurt him a bit, even though he don't buy this year. It won't hurt him to see how the other half of the fellows are farming. It may even be that be will discover in some instances that he is not keeping pace with the progress of modern farming. Maybe not, of course, but it will do him good to go and take a look, and then take account of himself and the way he is doing things at home
