AFFAIRS AT SOUTH OMAHA

Policeman Dworak Given Suspension by Board Members.

SALOON MAN HELD NOT GUILTY

Lucke Found Not to Have Sold Out of Hours—Cunningham's Case Taken Under Adversment by Board.

After all the long waiting and the tremendous efforts to fire Policeman John Dworak, the Board of Fire and Police Commissioners yesterday evening saved its face by handing a suspension on Dworak for being off his beat without permission. As was also foreseen, Saloonman P. R. Lucke was found not guilty of selling out of hours.

The estimated board came to its sapient decision only after a long agony. It appears as if Officer Dworak was to have been fired, if possible without creating too much trouble, but when the case was tried Dworak had all the evidence his way on the real charges and Commissioner Donahue, who filed the charges, was unable to get any corroboration for his side of the case. Then residents of Brown Park began to take a most important interest in the affair and the board kept putting off the decision until yesterday. But anyway, Dworak was punished and, being that he has a large family, it is thought the suspension will give much comfort to the board for its unswerving execution of the law against Dworak.

As is usual, the board took the case of Saloonman J. Cunningham under advisement. The board, according to Mayor Hoctor, also approved a set of rules for the fire department. He said a set had been approved for the police department last spring. It is doubtful, however, whether any printed copies have been put into the hands of the police or firemen.

Mayor Hoctor said that he had communicated with Chief of Police Briggs, who would arrange for a night patrolman in the district south of Q street from Thirtieth to Thirty-sixth street. The mayor said he had been persuaded of the necessity for such a course. Residents of the section say that they are absolutely without police protection and that lately they have been terrorized at night by drunken men brandishing revolvers and discharging firearms. It is understood that one member of the board has signified his unwillingness to give the taxpayers' petition for police protection any consideration.

Mayor Hoctor stated yesterday evening that he had an awful time at the meeting of the police board, but he did not go into detail on the matter.

Apple Day at Swift's.
It was apple day yesterday at Swift & Co.'s plant in all parts of the United States. It is arranged that every employee of Swift & Co. be supplied with fine eating apples.

James Handley was the originator of apple day, he having done more perhaps than any one other individual to have such a day thoroughly established all over the country, originating in the state of Illinois, and has been carried out at Swift & Co.'s plant at South Omaha for the last six years.

At Chicago where the day is commemorated apples are given away to school children. The idea is to promote the cultivation of fruit throughout the state of Illinois.

KANSAS IMAGERY SCORES

Locomotive Headlight Brightens Town an Hour Before Reaching the Station.

Tyrone, a little town just over the Kansas border in the northwestern panhandle of Oklahoma, bids defiance to the standard oil monopoly when John D. Rockefeller raises the price of kerosene to meet the costs of a court fine. Here the women wash and wipe the supper dishes with electricity, though there is not an electric light plant within forty miles of the village.

From 7 to 9 o'clock each evening the dozen homes of Tyrone are lit by the great headlight of a Rock Island passenger train, and the story of a traveling man's discomfiture and the $2 it cost him for clues for the men of the town, explains the distinction held by this panhandle metropolis.

J. P. Bancroft, representing a Kansas City house, had been sent down here to establish a new customer. He had finished his work and intended to take a night train back to Liberal. With a half dozen men Bancroft sat in the hotel saloon playing cards. He looked down the track and saw a great headlight looming up. He made a rush for his girls and yelled to the boy to take them over to the depot quick. Bancroft rushed up to the ticket window and demanded a ticket to Liberal.

"How's this?" he said to the agent. "I thought this train wasn't due for an hour, and here she is not a mile away?"

"Better go back to the hotel and buy cigars for that bunch. I guess this is your first trip down here. That headlight is just forty-nine miles away; you've got nearly an hour to finish that game of pinochle."

"This is the longest stretch of straight track in the United States—seventy miles clear across the panhandle without a curve. You see that house over there? That's where I live. I don't have to light up until after 9 o'clock winter nights. About twilight the Golden State limited looms up about Texhoma and she shines right into my kitchen window for an hour, finally getting so bright that my wife has to pull the curtain, and ten minutes behind her comes 34, and it takes her seventy minutes to get by with her light."

"It's a great saving for me, and my wife now won't wash dishes by anything but electric light. I never have to call the dispatcher to get the time on trains. I climb to the roof of the station, get a line on the headlight and make up my board accordingly."—New York Sun.

WHAT THE FIGHT IS ABOUT

Machinery, Dynamite Fabrics and Cheap Labor in American Silk Mills.

To understand the grievance of the employees of the broad silk and ribbon factories, which constitute 90 per cent of the silk plants in Paterson, N. J., it is necessary to go back nearly twenty years. In the middle '90s a high speed loom was perfected which could be run by women. Immediately far-sighted capitalists, banking on the fact that women would work for lower wages than men, opened factories in Scranton, Bethlehem, Allentown, Easton and other Pennsylvania cities and towns where the men were employed in mines, steel plants, railways and farms, and where there was a large available supply of feminine labor. Silk manufacturing boomed in Pennsylvania, and to keep in the race for profits, Paterson manufacturers were obliged to adopt the tactics of their rivals. Women came into the mills of the Jersey town and wages dropped. The men faced the alternative of working for women's wages or losing their jobs.

The ingenuity of man is boundless when profits are concerned. Half a century ago each weaver operated a single loom. Later it was found that a man could manage two looms, and more recently the three and four loom systems were adopted in many mills. Successively as these steps were taken people were thrown out of work and the competition of labor became greater. Another drop in wages followed. While this was taking place looms were widened and lengthened, and the double-deck loom was devised.

In factories in which the four-loom system is employed a worker today controls four looms of thirty-six inches wide; that is, he does the work that eight men with eighteen-inch single looms would have accomplished fifty years ago. Mills that are still on the two-loom system have been forced by the law of economics to cut prices to the standard of their competitors. It should be understood that weavers are piece workers; that is, they are paid so much for every "end" (thread) in the cloth they weave. Why, then, it may be asked, has the increased productivity of the mills due to "doubling up" looms not increased the worker's earning capacity?

Almost synchronously with the adoption of high producing looms a process was perfected by which silk could be weighted or "dynamited," as it is called, with adulterants which have added to its volume and gave it a heavy, smooth quality, pleasing to the touch, while shortening the life of the fabric. This weighted silk has come into general use, as it can be sold much more cheaply than the pure material. It runs through the looms faster than the unadulterated article, but as it contains fewer threads of silk, and as the weavers' wages depend on the number of threads woven, it can be seen why wages did not go up when with weighted silk—Gregory Mason in the high speed looms came into the industry Outlook.
