

SYNOD BACKS FORWARD MOVE

Presbyterians Prepare for State-Wide Evangelistic Campaign.

TO RUN THROUGHOUT MARCH

Dr. D. E. Jenkins Head of United Committee to Prosecute It—Appeal for Re-Establishing Family Altar.

The Presbyterian synod of Nebraska, which had been in session at North church since last Wednesday night, adjourned yesterday after adopting the report of the executive commission, which was to have come up Saturday, but was displaced with some other business by the recess taken to enable delegates to visit Bellevue college after the prolonged debate on the college matter was concluded.

Among the propositions approved on recommendation of the executive commission were the State Forward Movement, in which the synod and presbyteries unite for a simultaneous evangelistic campaign next March; increase in the giving to both temperance and ministerial relief; a larger budget of expenses for synod; a general increase per capita in the gifts to the nine benevolences supported by the church.

The synod authorized a committee of five elders to take up the matter of re-establishing the family altar in the homes, which is said to have undergone decay in late years. It appointed Rev. Mr. Keener of University Place chairman of the newly formed evangelistic committee and appointed a united committee to prosecute the simultaneous campaign in March, this committee consisting of the executive commission and the various chairmen of synodical committees on benevolences. As Dr. D. E. Jenkins of Omaha is chairman of the executive commission he was made chairman of the united committee.

Rev. N. McCliffin of Omaha and Rev. Mr. Samuel Light of Niobrara presbytery are members of this united committee, as the special representatives of general assembly.

Derailed Cars on Rock Island Hold Back Express Train

Sunday afternoon three cars, the smoker, a coach and one sleeper of the Rock Island's No. 17, the Oklahoma Express, were derailed at Summit, between the Union station and South Omaha. An investigation has failed to disclose why the cars left the track. The train was running at a low rate of speed. The wheels of the smoker left the rails and the other cars followed before the engineer could stop the train. The train ran along the ties for fifty feet or so, shaking up the passengers. The only person injured was the news agent, who was slightly scratched by falling against a seat.

The derailment delayed the Oklahoma train an hour, it being necessary to make up another train at Council Bluffs and run it around the derailed train, which was not gotten back onto its track until yesterday morning.

Jean Gilbert Jones Inspects All the Orkin Bros. Pianos

Jean Gilbert Jones, one of Omaha's most prominent musicians, will inspect today all of the pianos that are to be sold under the Orkin Brothers' co-operative selling scheme that is in vogue at their establishment at present. Mr. Jones will inspect each and every machine for tone, quality, action and touch.

The Orkin Brothers are now deep in the plans of their co-operative selling scheme and are preparing to sell to the public. In order to assure themselves as well as their customers that the pianos are all that both they and the manufacturers say they are, Orkin has arranged to have all the pianos inspected by a local man while the instruments are on the floor. Of course, all of the pianos were inspected before they were shipped to Omaha, but it is possible that the moving from the east to Omaha may have affected the playing qualities of some one or two of the instruments, and if such is the case the local firm does not want to sell the piano.

Mr. Jones will perform the inspection Tuesday and it will probably occupy several hours' time in the morning. When he has completed his inspection of each individual piano he will place an affidavit on the piano stating that the tone quality, the action and the touch are all in perfect condition, so that everyone who purchases a piano will have Mr. Jones' signed affidavit that the instrument is as near perfect as it is possible to make it.

Anybody is at liberty to inspect the pianos themselves, but Mr. Robinson, manager of the department, wishes to assure the public that Mr. Jones is recognized as a musician of more than ordinary ability and is fully capable of passing judgment on any piano. All of the pianos are on the floor, so that everybody may see for themselves what they are purchasing before they buy.

Mr. Robinson reports that the sale is more than satisfactory. "The public," said Mr. Robinson, "recognizes that the sale is unprecedented and is taking advantage of the exceptional reduction in price. We will move every one of the 30 pianos in an incredibly short time—relatively short, of course, because pianos are a difficult stock to move in a short space of time."

PURSUIT CONSTITUTES LIFE

And Possession Adds to the Joy of Living, Says Dr. L. D. Young.

BEATRICE MINISTER HERE

Talks at the Lowe Avenue Presbyterian Church, Saying the Goal of Pursuit is God, Who is Everywhere.

Dr. Leon D. Young of Beatrice preached at Lowe Avenue Presbyterian church yesterday morning on the theme, "The Enchanting Pursuit," taking his scriptural text from Psalms 138:8, "My soul followeth after Thee."

Dr. Young, who is known as one of the strongest Presbyterian ministers in Nebraska, is a pulpit orator of unusual powers, but with a deep spiritual tone dominating his preaching. With impressive effect he followed his theme to its logical conclusion with a superb picture of heaven as man's ultimate enchanting pursuit.

"Pursuit and possession constitute life," he said.

"The crusades were an enchanting pursuit. The pilgrims pressed on to Jerusalem, not only to recover the sepulcher, itself, but for a deeper and richer purpose, for Christ had spent three days and nights within the tomb and that fact, not the mere possession of a sepulcher, is what impelled the crusades. The reformation was an enchanting pursuit and so was the renaissance, and so is this great twentieth century enterprise of missions—it, like those great mass movements of the soul before it, is an enchanting pursuit.

"The goal of the pursuit was God. And where shall we find God? We shall find Him in the world within, in ourselves, and if we do not find Him there, we shall not find Him anywhere."

"Man at his best," said Dr. Young, "touches God. But is not God in the world without? Yes, God is everywhere, but we must first find Him in the world within, to find Him in the world without."

The minister drew a striking picture of God in the seasons—spring, summer, autumn, winter and all their typical forms and attributes. In all nature, in fact, and said "We can find Him there; we can find Him in the masterpieces of art, in the noble deeds of life, but more than all in His word, the Bible and its exemplification in the world within and then the world without."

Giving Picture Play of Interest at Hipp

"In the Bishop's Carriage," with Mary Pickering in the role of Nancy, will be shown at the Hipp for four days, beginning with Tuesday. This is one of the really interesting tales of its kind; it tells how a very charming young woman grew up a foundling, falling into company with Tom Dorgan, a professional thief, who was making of her a most accomplished criminal. She has "lifted" the cloak of a rich young woman at a railway station in New York and in order to escape arrest has jumped into the bishop's carriage and pretended to faint. The good old bishop mistakes her for the girl one of his wealthy parishioners is expecting and drives her to the home. There Tom Dorgan is already installed as a servant, planning on robbing the place. The young and earnest district attorney, who happens to be present at the home, sees through Nancy's pretense, and also discovers Tom Dorgan. He also has a few notions of criminology—that are different from the accepted and decides to try an experiment. In carrying this out, he plans for a meeting between Nancy and a theatrical manager at his rooms. Tom Dorgan comes there to steal and is entrapped, Nancy helping to take him. Dorgan is sent to prison and the girl goes into vaudeville and makes good. In the meantime the engagement between the district attorney and his aristocratic fiancée has been broken; before he is able to win Nancy away from her attachment to Tom Dorgan the latter escapes from prison and returns to find Nancy located in a handsome flat, the result of her own prosperity. The criminal attacks her and the attorney comes just in time to rescue her; all are arrested, but in police court the matter is set right and Nancy and her true lover are made happy.
