their thirty-eight pound equipment, also tractor, jerked off their helmets and ran into the entry off the eighteenth room. There they were overcome by polsonous gases, but members of the other divisions of the crew finally brought them to the surface alive. Walter Kerr, one of the rescued men, had not recovered consciousness

several hours later, but Roy Simpleman, his companion, told of the harrowing experlences which, in the opinion of rescue leaders, probably caused the death of Lurdi and Poiss.

This probable fatality and the terrors of the face of the mine, which is so thickly infested with poisonous gases so affected the helmet men that J. C. Roberts, directing the government rescue work, experienced difficulty securing men to re-enter the mine to search for Lurdi and Poisa. Volunteers were called for and when the first entered the mine Lurd! and Poiss had been in the workings, unhelmeted, for an hour and a half.

This crew consisted of five men with four emergency men following closely carrying helmsts and oxygen tanks. Director Roberts, who has been unceasingly active in reacue work since his arrival yesterday, appeared greatly affected by this loss of helmet men and unhesitatingly referred to it as "the greatest tragdy of the mine disaster." which already had claimed probably 261 lives. Roberts has been in continuous charge of the rescue work without a moment's relief since noon yesterday, and it was only by physical force that he was kept search for Lurdi and Poisa.
