ITCHED FOR 20 YEARS, RESINOL CURED IN 10 DAYS

Baltimore, Md., July 10, 1912.—"About twenty years ago both my knees began to itch from ankle to knee. Little pimples came out that looked very much like heat. The itching and burning was something terrible. I would start to scratch and could not stop. I would even scratch through the skin and that of course would leave a sore, which I was compelled to bandage.

"I tried several prescriptions and treatments, but received not a particle of benefit—no more than if the treatments were cold water. I then began to have very little faith in anything and of course could do nothing but scratch away. After suffering constantly for twenty years, a friend recommended Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment. From the very first application, I found relief, and was entirely cured in ten days. The itching and burning sensations have ceased and my skin is as smooth as a child's. (Signed) Charles Warner, 123 N. Stricker St.

Physicians have prescribed Resinol for eczema, psoriasis and every dermatitis in the country. Resinol Soap (25c), and Resinol Ointment (50c and $1.00). Get from any druggist or toilet counter a 50 cent bottle of Parisian Soap. Rub it well into the scalp every night. The first application will remove dandruff. When the hair stops falling and the new growth appears, use every other night until the hair is thick and abundant.

Omaha Typical Great City of West, Says Daniels

Speech Delivered at Noon to Business Men of Omaha at Commercial Club

from beyond the Mississippi. There is not time now to recount your attainments. They speak for themselves. They are known and read of all men. The development of the west is a story of wonder. The endurance and perseverance of the pioneer "cobblers," who often laid down their lives in blazing the path for commerce and civilization; the lure of gold to the forty-niners; the era of transcontinental railroad building, with its problems of finance and engineering; the homestead period of settling—all this has attracted the attention of the modern historian and even ex-presidents think it well worth while to write books on 'The Winning of the West.' So tremendous has been the progress and development of your country from the Father of Waters to the Pacific ocean, that it has exerted an inestimable influence in behalf of the building of the Panama canal. The German poet, Goethe, with the eye of seer, foresaw this result when the west was yet young, and in predicting the construction of the Panama canal, said:

"Opportunity of United States. "I should wonder if the United States were to let an opportunity escape of getting such a work into their own hands. It may be foreseen that this young state, with its decided predilection to the west, will in thirty or forty years, have occupied and peopled the large tract of land beyond the Rocky mountains. It may furthermore be foreseen that along the coast of the Pacific ocean, where nature has already formed the most capacious and secure harbors, important commercial towns will gradually arise for the furtherance of a great intercourse between China and the East Indies, and the United States. In such a case, it would be not only desirable, but almost necessary that a more rapid communication should be maintained between the eastern and western shore of North America, both by merchant ships and men of war, than has hitherto been possible with the tedious, disagreeable and expensive Voyage around Cape Horn. I therefore repeat that it is absolutely indispensable for the United States to effect a passage from the Mexican gulf to the Pacific ocean; and I am certain that they will do it."

"Canal Fine Project. The canal was not built as quickly as Goethe thought it would be, but it is a fine work by your own city as typical of the great cities of the west, and the county of which you are the chief city is well named, as I take it, in honor of Douglas, the great democrat who introduced the Kansas-Nebraska act, a step which beyond involving the repeal of the Missouri compromise, led ultimately to the establishment of your trans-Mississippi exposition illustrated, as had never before been done, the development of the west. 'It was a remarkable truth strikingly put when one of the speakers at the opening of your exposition declared that in a territory occupied only by Indians fifty years previously there are now 22,000,000 people with an aggregate wealth of $22,000,000,000. Now truly these figures justify Talleyrand's statement to Minister Livingston and Special Envoy Monroe, after the Louisiana purchase: 'You have made a noble bargain for yourselves; and I suppose you will make the most of it.'"

"The credit for the Louisiana purchase is due to Thomas Jefferson. No American statesman ever knew the joy of achievement so fully as Jefferson, but he chose for his epitaph only the statement that he was author of the declaration of independence, the Virginia statute for religious toleration, and the founder of the University of Virginia. Henry Watterson, however, declares that the greatest triumph of his career, the greatest benefit he conferred upon his country, was the annexation of the Louisiana territory to the United States. 'Soon after the purchase war broke out between England and France. Louisiana would have been one of Britain's first seizures had the territory not belonged to us, and, but for Jefferson, Omaha might today be a Canadian city and the Dominion would not unlikely have included the whole trans-Mississippi region to the Pacific.'"

"Possibilities of Great West. "I do not think that history has fully realized the height and depth of Jefferson's thinking on the great west. As has been truly said by one of his most brilliant and sympathetic historians, 'He was quick to encourage George Rogers Clarke when he offered to invade the vast Illinois country. When governor of Virginia, he pushed the frontier of his state to the banks of the Mississippi and held it there with a fort.' I have been impressed as never before by my recent reading of Jefferson's conclusions but comprehensive sketch of the life of Meriwether Lewis, written in 1813 to accompany Paul Allen's History of the Lewis and Clarke Expedition. Almost as much can be read between the lines as is contained in its pregnant paragraphs to show that Jefferson's mind had been long dwelling on the possibilities of the west. Who can say how much his study of the west prepared him, strict constitutionalist of the constitution that he was, to find a way to hold Louisiana after his able young understudy, Monroe, and the experienced diplomat Livingston had seized the imperial opportunity to secure it."

"About 1783 Jefferson suggested to George Rogers Clarke to make a trip of exploration to the northwest, but nothing then came of it. "Changes in Indian Trade. "Early in 1803, the act for establishing trading houses among Indian tribes being about to expire, Jefferson sent a message to congress recommending some changes and the extension of trade to the Indians of the Missouri. To blaze the way for such trade, he proposed an expedition to trace to its source this wonderful river which seemed to have no end. Congress voted the necessary appropriation of $2,500, and the important mission was entrusted to Meriwether Lewis, who had been ambitious to undertake the task before, and who had proved his metal and his fitness for such work in his early childhood, for says no less a chronicler than Jefferson himself, 'When only eight years of age he habitually went out in the dead of night alone with his dogs, into the forest to hunt the raccoon and the opossum, which, seeking their food in the night, can only then be taken. In this exercise no season or circumstance could obstruct his purpose—plunging through the winter's snows and frozen streams in pursuit of his object.'"

"Lewis chose Clarke as his companion, the brother of the man who had previously distinguished himself in Illinois, and the rest is history. The explorers passed your way. Your city is on the trail of their famous expedition. "Preparation of Lewis and Clarke. "Jefferson had the passion for accuracy and his preliminary precautions and preparation, and the thoroughness even to minute detail of the instructions he issued to Lewis and Clarke are striking. He first sent Lewis to Philadelphia to be under instruction from the professors there so as to have 'a greater familiarity with the technical language of the natural sciences and readiness in the astronomical observations necessary for the geography of his route.' 'Well did President William McKinley say when he sent his telegram creating your splendid exposition in 1904, that nowhere have the unconquerable determination, the self-reliant strength, and the sturdy manhood of American citizenship been more forcibly illustrated than in the achievements of the people JOHN McNEIL TO BE BURIED THURSDAY AT WASHINGTON

The accident occurred in St. Joseph, Mo., when Thompson was struck by an engine piston head which had blown out. He was walking along a path at the side of the railroad track.
