THE WORLD ASTU

When Omaha surveyed the desolation that the Easter tornado had left in its trail, it was appalled. The task before it was one to dishearten most cities, but Omaha, with marvelous push and cool headed organization, went at the rebuilding task. It built homes in the tornado zone-such good homes-that soon the city will be better than ever. So rapid has the work been that the work of rebuilding more than 80 per cent of the wrecked buildings have been started or finished. As you pass through the zone one marvels that a city could recover so rapidly.

Wrecked in a night Rebuilt in a day

A 32-page book, with large, sharp illustrations, which The Bee has just published as a companion book to the one issued right after the tornado, shows how the city has recovered. Photographs of places as they looked twelve hours after the storm, and as they appeared six weeks later are given. It is a photographic story of the storm and the rebuilding.

Let the world know what Omaha has done.
