Around the Store

Owing to the recent change of management of this store, which necessitated a complete readjustment and reorganization, it was impossible for us to be in readiness and join with the other merchants of the city in the united STYLE SHOW this week.

However, we have done our best in the way of decorations and displays, both in our windows and interior in keeping with the spirit of the exhibitions of the week.

If at any time there is something you need and you find it inconvenient to come to the store, just call DOUGLAS 137 and ask for MRS. MABEL GRAY SMITH. Mrs. Smith will look after your wants with the same care and attention, insuring the same satisfaction as a personal visit.

You'll always find desirable medium-priced merchandise of the wanted sort in our ECONOMY BASEMENT.

Our store is a public institution. You do not have to buy whenever you come here. Come to look and we will thank you for it.

How the Thoughtful Woman of Today Keeps Her Figure

THERE is a saying, "We have no more grandmothers." Have you thought of the reason? The woman of today makes her corset her pride—the right model will not permit her to grow old.

Women of vigorous, active minds and bodies; women who think, who "keep themselves up"; women vitally young in figure and feeling—these are the women who insist on Warner's Rust-Proof CORSETS.

Particularly those who incline to stoutness—those who have tried so-called reducing corsets that have not reduced. These women find in time that the saving of their size and figure is solved by wearing a simple corset accurately designed and properly boned.

If you are in this class, why not let us supply you with one of the Warner styles designed for you? Price Range $1 to $8 Burgess-Nash Co.—Second Floor.

Only 8 Days Left to Close Out FURNITURE

AND as the time gets shorter, more radical are the price reductions. Every piece must be gone by April 1, regardless of how good and desirable it may be. Here is only an idea of what the savings represent. Come see for yourself.

TOO MANY TALL BUILDINGS

Exploded Idea About the Value of Height as a Business Proposition. One would think that the recent publicity given to building-height limitations would have awakened cities to a realization of the need for appropriate enactment. Detroit has heard and is considering a height-limitation ordinance.

Minneapolis is either in ignorance or prefers advertising to sensible civic development. The tallest completed building in Minneapolis is twelve stories, about 250 feet high, but one reaching 300 feet is to be started May 1. Unless all previous experience is contradicted, then will begin the senseless rivalry as to height, and some competitor of the owners of the proposed structure will show that they can "go them one better."

The present maximum, 150 feet, is a good point at which to stop. There is no excuse for exceeding it. It is contended in all cases where the usual height is exceeded that land values require high structures in order that there may be a fair return on the investment. That, however, is the starting point of a vicious circle—tall buildings increase land values, increased land values require higher buildings; these higher buildings still further increase the land values, and so on.

Another argument advanced in favor of the tall building is that a compact business district is a necessity if a town is to be commercially important. That idea has been exploded by New York's expansion. The business district now stretches from the Battery to Forty-second street—four miles—and the section farthest from the Wall street district is growing at the greatest rate—Engineering Record.

Socialist Secrecy. The new summer boarder gazed over the picturesque New Hampshire landscape then slowly falling out of sight, and noted the absence of houses. "It's beautiful!" Grand said he to the host, who was standing close by. "But aren't you lonesome—so far from the village and no neighbors?" "Lonesome?" echoed the farmer, in genuine astonishment. "Why, on a clear day we can see Mount Washington!" Everybody's Magazine.

Good Reasons. "I lunched with Walter Winans at Claridge's last week," said a London correspondent. "Walter Winans, sculptor, author, sportsman and altruist, is a Galtonian whom all America should be proud of. "He is interesting himself just now, horse lover that he is, in the suppression of tail docking, and, over our fresh Arabian caviar, he told me an appropriate story."

"He said a man driving in the country one summer morning saw the sign, 'Horses taken to graze here. Short tails half price.' "The man stopped and asked the farmer why he grazed short tails cheaper than long tails. "Well, you see," the farmer explained, "the long tails can brush away the flies, but the short tails are so tormented that they hardly eat a handful of grass a day."
