Commission government was suggested as a panacea for these conditions. It was adopted. But the ward bosses and the heeled fought valiantly to retain their prestige. Graft continued to flourish and the police department was declared to be corrupt.

How Nebraskans Voted.

In the vote on the previous question and on the rule itself the representatives from Nebraska divided three and three, Messrs. Kinkaid, Sloan and Barton voting against the rule and against the previous question, while Lobeck, Maguire and Stephens voted with the democratic majority on both the rule and the previous question. It had been expected that Mr. Lobeck would vote against the rule, believing that it will be inimical to the interests of his constituency, and also believing that it was a good deal of a "gag" law that was being put over and which aroused the everlasting protest of Speaker Clark. But Mr. Lobeck saw President Wilson yesterday, and while not imputing to Mr. Lobeck any ulterior purpose whatsoever in his call upon the president, the fact remains that the one doubtful vote of yesterday in the Nebraska delegation ceased to be doubtful today. While the republicans in some instances changed front, especially in the Nebraska delegation, in their votes of two years ago on the Panama canal act, they justify themselves in no uncertain way and they put their votes upon the high ground of American patriotism rather than truckling to any foreign power.

Kinkaid Gives His Reasons.

John Kinkaid, the sear of the Nebraska delegation, said in explanation of his change of attitude: "I voted against the rule and shall vote against the bill, because its effect, if passed in response to the British construction placed upon the treaty, sanctioned by President Wilson's address to congress, will be to deprive the United States of its sovereign right to control its domestic commerce, saying nothing about our foreign commerce."

WASHINGTON, March 28.—(Special Telegram.)—Not since the vote was taken declaring that a condition of war existed between Spain and the United States has there been a day more pregnant with great meaning to the American people than was witnessed in the house of representatives yesterday.

From early morning thousands of people sought admission to the galleries and by the same token, thousands were turned away by reason of the inadequacy of the galleries to accommodate those who desired to witness an historic occasion, which it was in every sense of the word. Never in the frenzied debate over the tariff, over any great vital subject, has there been so much interest shown as in the debate on the rule which was brought in from the committee on rules, giving three hours to its consideration, and that twenty hours to be devoted to the so-called Sims bill, which repeals that clause in the Panama canal act that gives free tolls to American ships engaged in coastwise trade through the canal.
