

MEATS CLIMBING IN PRICE

Pork Makes Advance of Dollar Per Hundred Pounds.

EGGS SHOW MORE STRENGTH

Retail Price Remains the Same, While Wholesale Is in Ascendancy—Pineapples and Oranges Are Steadily Going Up.

"With regrets" from the packers comes the announcement that most meats have made another advance in the last week. All pork is up 10 cents per hundred. This means pork shoulders, loins and chops as well as other lines of pork. Likewise it means that the retailers say they must raise the price at once in order to come out on the right side of the ledger. No market men say that pork that has been retailed at 30 cents a pound will very soon be retailed at 32 1/2 cents at least.

Veal steak is now priced at 30 cents a pound when it was selling at 27 1/2 cents a few days or a week ago. Lamb are up $1 a hundred wholesale and retailers are preparing to make a corresponding advance in the retail price.

Eggs are a half cent stronger wholesale, but are still selling at retail at 20 cents a dozen.

The demand for butter is declining. This is an account of the approaching warm weather. During the last winter, however, there was perhaps the largest sale of butter that the product has ever enjoyed. Manager Al King of the grocery department, Hayden Bros., says that department sold almost double the amount of butter last winter than it ever sold in any previous season.

Pineapples have advanced 50 cents a crate wholesale. They are new on the market and it was predicted from the first that as soon as the demand rose the price must climb.

The supply of oranges is now limited as the season for the bulk of the high grade oranges is rapidly drawing to a close. They are still selling at a price they have held for several weeks, but it is predicted that by next week they will be a nickel higher per dozen in all grades.

DANGERS OF WOOD ALCOHOL

Workmen Who Handle It Are Always in Peril of Being Poisoned by It.

Nearly a thousand cases of poisoning attributed to wood alcohol have been reported since 1902. When methyl alcohol was placed on the market, under the trade names of "Colonial Spirit," "Manhattan Spirit," "Pro Spirit," etc. The business involves the annual production and use of about 10,000,000 gallons of the substance, with a capital investment in this country of about $10,000,000 in the industry. When the employees over the attitude taken by the manufacturers toward the agitation for the control of this dangerous preparation. We are reminded that since man began to handle fire he has been utilizing dangerous substances to his own good purpose, and that many of the most useful substances are dangerous and poisonous.

danger; impervious gloves will prevent the second; only education can ward off the third. The New York report makes the following recommendations as to laws which should be enacted: To prohibit the presence of wood alcohol in preparations intended for external use on the human body. To require simple ventilation in works in which wood alcohol is made or used in manufacturing products wherein the wood alcohol remains as such; the same law should apply where the products containing wood alcohol are used up, as for example in varnishing vats in breweries. To require containers in which wood alcohol is marketed to bear suitable display labels of warning.—New York Post.

JURY FINDS MAURY DIGGS INNOCENT OF GRAVE CHARGE

SAN FRANCISCO, May 8.—Maury I. Diggs, former state architect, was acquitted today by a jury which tried him on an indictment charging a statutory offense against Ida Pearrine, a minor. Diggs gained notoriety last year when he was tried and convicted of violation of the Mann white slave law, following an elopement from Sacramento, Cal., to Reno, Nev., with two girls, in company with Drew Caminetti, son of Anthony Caminetti, commissioner general of Immigration.

MARRIAGE CUSTOMS IN JAVA

A Land Without Elopements and No Taint of Brothels or Prem-ise Cases.

If the story of Romeo and Juliet were to be translated into Malay, the Javanese would be overcome with wonder at the troubles which befell those ill-starred lovers. The method in vogue among European nations of compelling two young people to regulate their own affairs would excite the commissioner of a mother of Java, for she would regard it as the refinement of cruelty to throw her daughter or her son upon their own resources, with no kindly hand to arrange the details of the most important transaction of one's life.

The gentle, brown subjects of Queen Wilhelmina, who lived in the great island over which she reigns, never have the disagreeable incidents of breach of promise or elopement. No fond heart is ever jolted by a jilt, and the unpleasant effects of colds and influenza, as the result of exposure to the night air while serenading some damsel, are not among the dangers to be faced by the jeunesse doree of the land of the coffee berry and the betel nut.

In the well organized social scheme of Java, marriages are made as soon as the little strangers open their blinking, slanting bits of black eyes upon the world. As soon as a baby is born, a suitable husband or wife is sought out among the families of the same social set, and the parents of the future wedded pair arrange all the details of the ceremony with the agreeable incidents of breach of promise or elopement.

Much planning of the wedding gown of the bride is avoided by the simple process of staining her face and the upper portion of her body with a liberal coat of yellow ochre. The rest of her figure is enveloped in two "sarongs," or square pieces of cloth, the upper one coming under the sarongs and over the chest and the lower one wrapped around the hips and coming down to the feet.

The "sarongs" are brilliantly colored with native dyes and the more expensive bear designs of much beauty and taste. At the hour for the ceremony draws near, a richly beaded, and embroidered crown is placed upon the bride's head. Hang-down on each side from the crown are long strings of tuberoses, threaded on thin strips of bamboo, reaching to below the waist. The oldest women in the village are selected for bridesmaids and they deck the bride up in finery and in the yellow ochre with paint brushes wherever the pigment shows signs of wear. The bride is rarely over ten years of age at this time.

When the sandals are put on and the finishing touches given to the wedding gown, the friends of the bridegroom are notified that the bride is impatiently awaiting the groom, and he is forthwith conducted to her home. There, seated upon a large divan, she receives him in silence as he takes his place beside her. He, also, has been daubed over with yellow ochre and his eyebrows have been shaved and their outlines marked with paint. A pair of dark blue trousers with a wide gold braid around the bottoms adorns his person, and a "sarong," similar to that worn by his bride, is gracefully draped around his waist. Like the statesman from Medicine Lodge, he wears no stockings, a pair of ornamental sandals being the extent of his footwear.

Blue, gold and crimson furnish the most popular color scheme affected by Javanese brides. A brilliant crimson hat, brimless and lined with gold braid and beads, throws the bright yellow ochre of his face into relief. The strings of tuberoses are worn by both parties, and the heavy sweetness of the perfume fills the air. The groom brings with him a number of brass vessels, the principal one being a large bowl, around the sides of which are arranged receptacles for powdered lime, tobacco and betel nut and a fragrant leaf in which these are rolled and then thrust into the mouth to be chewed. The large brass vessel is used as a cuspidor, and is placed conveniently at hand.

This outfit is always carried by Javanese society folk, such as cigars and matches, are carried by American men. Signs prohibiting spitting on the floor are unknown in Java. The bride possesses a similar betel nut set, although, as befitting her sex, it is of a more dainty pattern.

The groom, upon his arrival, is shown to his seat by the bride, and great dishes of rice, corn cakes cooked in coconut oil, bananas and tamarinds are brought in for the wedding feast. This meal might be thought a trifle long by western brides, as it lasts for three days and three nights, during all of which time the bride sits by the side of her husband. Little balls of rice are made and stuffed into her mouth by her attendants and, in the intervals between sittings, she chews betel nut. The groom follows in the same program. On the first day the happy couple have no difficulty in keeping awake, but on the second day weariness begins to be felt, and on the third their tired heads droop and their sleepy eyes close in little cat-naps.

No priestly blessing is invoked. At the end of the three married, the couple are considered legally married and are taken back home by their respective parents and sent to school again. When they reach the age of eighteen or twenty the bride and groom are given a house and they go to housekeeping without any more ceremony.—Washington Star.

NO NEW WORK ON BURLINGTON DURING THE COMING SEASON

Relative to railroad matters, President Miller of the Burlington gave Mr. Holdrege to understand while on the recent trip that aside from the work previously planned and for which appropriations have already been made, there will be no new construction in Burlington territory this year. As to the new work started last year and for which money has been appropriated, Mr. Holdrege said: "The Wyoming line from Casper, east to Orin Junction, is nearly all graded. Leveling up will begin shortly and about July 1 track laying will start. The contract for grading the Chalco-Yutan cutoff will be let within a few days and the completion of the line will be hurried along. The material is being assembled for the track and after the grading is finished it will be but a short time until the line will be in operation."

GOTHAMITE'S HEALTH TEST

Annual Physical Examinations for Everybody Proposed in New York.

Yearly health examinations for all of the 5,000,000 people of New York city is suggested by Dr. S. S. Goldwater, commissioner of health, as probably the next long step to be taken by the municipality in the fight against disease. All who could afford to pay for such an examination should do so, and the public funds should pay for the examination of all others, he said.

The 3,000 employees of the health department are being physically examined to develop any latent physical weakness and to obtain data upon which duties could be adjusted to the strength of individual employees. By this is meant that any individual showing symptoms of heart trouble, for instance, would be given tasks requiring but slight physical exertion. As soon as the records of the physical examination of health department employees are available for deduction and report, an appeal will be made to the board of estimate to provide funds for the physical examination of all city employees.

Life insurance companies, trust companies, the stock exchange, mercantile establishments and other business concerns with large numbers of employees have provided for their physical examination on the first day that the employees of an insurance company were examined, four cases of tuberculosis were uncovered, most of the victims not suspecting their own condition. At the New York Stock exchange, examinations showed that four young men operating telephones were tubercular.

Dr. Goldwater said that strict individual examination was necessary to enforce the law for registration of communicable diseases. Individuals, he said, were indifferent to or ignorant of warning symptoms. Records showed that in the degenerative diseases large numbers of the victims consulted physicians too late in the course of the disease to permit of cure. In cancer, the records showed that the victim consulted medical practitioners on an average of a year too late for remedial measures to be effectively undertaken. Degenerative diseases mentioned by Dr. Goldwater included cancer and diseases of the arteries, heart and kidneys.

The health department has long had a bureau of child hygiene, that prevents epidemics in the public schools and cares for the general health of school pupils to the age of 18. Dr. Goldwater asked why medical oversight should terminate at that age, and answered his question by saying:

THE HEALTH DEPARTMENT WOULD PROBABLY SOON HAVE A BUREAU OF ADULT HYGIENE.

He spoke of a probable conference of insurance companies' physicians, health department physicians and other medical men, to devise a standard form for the examination of individuals, and for recording the results. "The hygiene of the individual," said Dr. Goldwater, "and by that I mean a periodical physical examination of the individual and his education in elementary hygiene, would add from three to five years to the lives of the residents of this city."—New York Post.

DWINDLING OF APPOMATTOX

Historic Finish of the Civil War Almost Vanished from the Map.

The village of Appomattox, the place of Lee's surrender forty-nine years ago on April 9, has fallen into ruin and has nearly disappeared. Three houses have survived fire, storm and neglect, but even these are warped and sagging, and the promise is that they, too, will soon rot, and that weeds, followed by scrub pine, will overrun their site. Two of these houses have been long abandoned, and but one is now occupied by the large family of a small farmer, stranger to that part of Virginia and unfamiliar with, and indifferent to, the great memories that cluster around that tragic ground.

At the time of the surrender the village was the seat of Appomattox county. It was then, after four years of war, a seedy, rustic, ramshackle crossroads hamlet. A cluster of dwellings, mostly of wood, a few lawyers' offices, a couple of doctors' offices, a tavern, a smithy, a hiring stable and a store or two leant around the stately, square house square. The court building was burned down twenty years ago, and today the desolate court house square is cumbered with ashes, charred plaster, shattered bricks and bits of heat-damaged glass.

In a particularly dark patch of a gloomy stretch of pines the visitor comes upon the North Carolina monument. The inscription on this monument, which gives glorious praise to the soldiers of North Carolina, has caused tense and bitter controversy in the south. The inscription follows:

"LAST AT APPOMATTOX. "At this place the North Carolina brigade of Brigadier General W. R. Cox of Grimes' division fired the last volley April 9, 1865.

"Major General Bryan Grimes of North Carolina planned the last battle fought by the army of northern Virginia and he commanded the infantry engaged therein, the great part of whom were North Carolinians.

"This stone is erected by the authority of the general assembly of North Carolina in grateful and perpetual memory of the valor, endurance and patriotism of its sons, who followed with unshaken fidelity the fortunes of the confederacy to this closing scene, faithful to the end.

"North Carolina Appomattox commission: H. A. London, chairman; E. J. Holt, W. T. Jenkins, Cyrus S. Watson, A. D. McGill.
