Greetings for the New Year

The days have returned bringing memories of good cheer—memories of those gone and here; memories of things done and undone; memories of the first Christmas; our guidance toward peace on earth, good will toward men.
And the New Year 1913 begun, what will it bring this New Year, what will it bring this New Year, what will it bring this New Year? Thank God for the golden hope; thank God for faith, for love—these surely will remain; and may our years be as a golden stairway, each one lifting us a little higher.

Appreciated Love Letters

BY ADA PATTERSON.
There is a general impression that the love letter is passing. Considerable foundation for this belief is furnished by the crude epistolary evidence of the divorce courts.
We may be losing the art of writing such burning epistles as Heloise wrote to Abelard, such tender pages as Robert Browning sent to Elizabeth Barrett and such joys to the national mistresses as were written by the iron Hismarck, so wholly hypnotized that he wrote that the stars seemed to him "little pink sheep." The fifty-word telegram sent by night and the ten-word message that buzzed over the wires by day may have paralyzed the faculty of florid correspondence. But there is one kind of love letter we should not forget, and never neglect, to write. That is the letter home.
Better write one to father. It has been a long time since he received a love letter, so long that he cannot recall it, but the joy of that letter stirred in him was not so deep and solacing and satisfying as the one that his daughter at school, or his daughter who was married last June, writes to him. Fathers are neglected in the matter of correspondence. The news from the world-wanderer goes to mother. The letters father receives from her are short and to the point. The communications are likely to be not letters, but telegrams, like the cable which the last Joseph Jefferson received from his son abroad—"Please send five hundred."
"What for?" cables the elder. "For 'White' was the only that brought the money. The letters that father habitually gets arrive in long envelopes and are typewritten. Their contents are dry when they are not painful. Bills, duns, complaints, visionary business projects, demands to pay, or postponement of settlements, plain language, sometimes true and sometimes untrue, but always in unmistakable prose. But the letter that comes from daughter, a letter, not a demand for money, is poetry to him.

He chuckles over her pen pictures of her newest beau and is as pleased as mother could be when she describes her new gown and tells him that the German said she was the wittiest girl he had met in America. He may have said it at every other party to which he had been invited in this country, but father doesn't believe it. And he flushes with delight when the daughter, who is a bride, writes that Henry is a good husband, the most thoughtful and considerate in the world except Daddy. If she adds that Henry seems really annoyed when she tells him so, father chuckles as though he were a mischievous school boy caught stealing his deskmate's slate.
A big ruddy-faced, successful man looked hungrily through the mail for a letter from daughter. It wasn't there. Down the table came the voice of the daughter, who had stayed at home, one of the spinster saints, with whom some households are blessed.
"You know Mr. Grimes is very attentive. He takes a great deal of her time."
"Yes," answered father, the big man looking ruefully down into his little egg cup, "she's forgotten the man who loved her first."
Yes, write a love letter to father. His business life is like crossing a desert. He grows tired and dust-choked and sun-blinded sometimes and the letter—a little spring of sentiment gushed forth makes an oasis, green and cool and restful and beautiful for him.
Mother must have her love letter, too.

Often that is what is the matter when she writes you that she isn't well. The doctor says he doesn't know quite what ails her. But she feels tired somehow. She doesn't think an old woman is of much use any more in the world. When you receive such a letter as that from home, don't call in specialists and plan for a visit home as soon as you can make it. Sit down wherever you are, in street car or shop and scribble a letter to her—a love letter. Tell her you never needed her so much as now. Tell her that every silver hair of her is precious to you and that you are a better and a happier woman every moment in a crowded day that you steal a thought of her. Tell her there is a chamber in your heart that no one else may enter and that would be sadly empty without her. Say that over it is inscribed the word "Mother." Those who watch her read this letter will see a girlish pink flush into her tired cheeks and a brightness about her wistful mouth, a smile wreaths about her wistful mouth, until father will think, and let us hope that he will be thoughtful and tender enough to say, "Why, mother, you look just like the girl I married."
Tell her about your life. It's homely little details will delight her. You know how she still worries lest you don't "dress warm enough," even though your hair is beginning to grow gray above the ears and about the temples. And be sure to tell her again, at the end of the letter that you love her.

A Blessing to Victims of "Sore Feet" Agony

The following is absolutely the surest and quickest cure known to science for sore foot ailments. "Dissolve two tablespoonfuls of Calocide compound in a basin of warm water. Soak the feet in this for fully fifteen minutes gently rubbing the sore parts." The effect is really wonderful. All soreness goes instantly. The feet feel delightful. Corns and callouses can be removed right off. It gives immediate relief for sore bunions, blisters, and aching feet. Especially effective for frost-bites and chilblains. A twenty-five cent box of Calocide is said to be sufficient to cure the worst feet. It works through the pores and removes the cause of the trouble. Don't waste time on uncertain remedies. Any drug-seller has Calocide compound in stock or can get it in a few hours from his wholesale house. Published by the Medical Formula Laboratories of Chicago—Advertisement.
