Protect American Railroads, Too. SASKATOON, Canada, Jan. 25.-To the Editor of The Bee: Should there not be a United States law to prevent shipments of American manufacturered goods and other products being transported over foreign railroads, through foreign territory, from one place in the United States to another place in the United States, particularly so when the shipping point is in the United States and the destination is also in the United States, and both are common points with American railroads?

The American merchant marine is protected by a law of this nature, where shipments are made by water, and why should not the American railroads also be protected? Thereby keeping our own money in our own country and consequently giving more employment to our own citizens.

For instance, in shipping from New England to the middle and western states and vica versa, what is the sense of shipping goods from Chicago to New England over the Canadian Pacific or to the Grand Trunk railroad through foreign country, where there are several American railroads willing to carry these all American shipments.

If such a law as suggested were in force it would prevent a foreign corporation from getting a take-off on our own flour, wheat, canned fish, fruit and manufactured products.

These foreign corporations are now and have been subsidized a foreign government, thus it is hardly fair to expect American railroads to compete successfully with them without government aki or protection. A law of this nature would also reduce the costums house expense on our frontier points, where the shipments have to be looked after by officials in the pay of the American people to the advantage of the foreign corporations and railroads.
