Prof. Fling Says World's Society is a Necessity

"The war at present in Europe is the last chapter of the formation of a world society," said Prof. Fred Morrow Fling of the University of Nebraska in his lecture on "Europe and Her Colonies" before a large audience at the high school auditorium yesterday afternoon. "If we will but open our eyes we cannot help but see that a world society is not only a possibility, but an imperative necessity today."

Dr. Fling had led up to this point on a discussion of the tendency of the nations to expand and spread their influence over large areas until the world has been reduced to a comparatively small number of groups and organizations. He then called attention to the fact that the world cannot be unified by one civilized country forcing its domination upon another civilized people. The tendency, according to Dr. Fling, is to give self-government to a large extent in order to hold outlying territory. In discussing the possibility of a world society, he called attention to the greater facilities for trade and communication today.

"The world today," he said, "is nearly as small for purposes of communication as the city of Rome was in the days of Rome's power."
