Speculation as to the church at which resident-elect Wilson may elect to worship was revived today when a pamphlet describing historic spots was issued by the inaugural committee. It was noted therein that President-elect Wilson, who is a Presbyterian, had officiated here before he entered official life, at the fedication of the statute of John Witherspoon, located in front of the Presbyterian church of the Covenant. Witherspoon, besides being a signer of the Declaration of Independence, was one of the founders of Princeton university. Whether President-elect Wilson's distant connection with this church will lead him to take membership therein is a matter of general conjecture.
