jarred heavily upon her sensibilities.

She was traversing the desolated district in her Ford car, not wholly to gratify curiosity, but to seek newer opportunities to alleviate human suffering. Her car has grown rather bizarre looking from constant use, and the physician herself is not fussy about her clothes ar ever cares to waste any valuable time thinking

In her mission of mercy she had stopped her car at the curb and was waiting for word that would send her in another di-physician forward with some violence, but did not injure her in the slightest degree. The chauffeur got off his master's car and indolently walked around the
