

WORK OF CLEANING UP CITY TO BEGIN IN EARNEST TODAY

committee appointed by the chairman of the tornado restoration committee to confer with the heads of railroads entering Omaha and with heads of the packing concerns and stock yards with a view to getting subscriptions for the restoration funds.

The committee reports that it was well treated by the representatives of the several railroads entering Omaha and brought back some subscriptions. They expect more subscriptions to follow as a result of the visit. The committee will not be ready to give out any definite report before next Tuesday, the day of the meeting of the executive committee of the Commercial club.

Most of the railroads entering Omaha which have their headquarters in Chicago were hard hit by the floods in Ohio and Indiana and are called upon to contribute to the relief of the homeless both in the east and west.

Some of the heads of the various packing houses in Chicago were not in the city while the committee was here, and for that reason they will not be seen by the committee. Whether or not another trip will be made to Chicago by the committee the members are not now prepared to say, but some means will be taken to reach those whom the committee failed to see on account of absence.

Relief Worker Gives Views. John L. McCarty, who has been in charge of the relief work at station No. 3, 278 Franklin street, since the tornado and who is well acquainted with the conditions now existing in the ruined districts and among the victims of the storm, gives out the following suggestions and statement of conditions in an interview:

"After the experiences of the work of the first week I feel that I must say something to the people of this city—to those who have not yet become active in the work of relief. There are hundreds of families in the stricken district who lost everything in the storm save the clothes on their backs. Many will not ask for assistance. They must be relieved in a way that will not wound their sense of independence. Our committee is doing its utmost to find them, and when found, assistance such as we can give them is extended, but this is but the beginning. The time of constructive work is here. These families should not and must not, be placed in the position of penitents upon public charity.

"To the people of Omaha who were not in the path of the storm and who out of their abundance can extend aid I make this appeal: Why not take under your individual charge one family or two families; treat them as equals, but unfortunately because of the tempest, extend material aid to them; encourage the father and mother, if necessary, to obtain work for them and for the children who are of working age. See that the young children are so clothed that they may return to school. See to it that the father is once more receiving wage abundant store is furnished them. When you take charge of this family, or families, send word to the general committee of your action, and say to the committee that you will be responsible for these families, thus enabling the general committee and the relief stations to strike the names off the list.

"To the merchants and business men who employ men and women: I want to suggest that there are scores, and perhaps hundreds, of your employes who have not had a change of clothing since the storm destroyed their homes. They will not tell you of their destination. They will not put themselves in the attitude of objects of charity. You know these people. You know where they were living. You know where they are now living. Take charge of them and at once notify the general committee and the relief stations, and thus take the care of such cases off them.

"To the corporations—railroad and public service: Send word to the general committee that all men with families who were in your employ whose homes were wrecked will be looked after by your relief committee. Follow the example of the Union Pacific Railroad company, which assigned a man to each relief district with instructions to look after every case where the man was employed by that road. This rule was observed by this railroad and the work of the relief committee was greatly reduced thereby. The high officials of the Burlington railroad have asked all relief stations to furnish the names and addresses of applicants for relief who were employed by that road, with the intention of affording whatever assistance may be required in each case.

Seek Out the Needy. "In order to find worthy cases, ask your friend or your business associate. If you cannot obtain information this way, then go to the relief station in person and ask to be assigned the care of a family.

"My conclusion, after much experience, can be reduced to few words. The disaster was greater than most people comprehend. It cannot be measured in dollars and cents as evidenced by destroyed buildings; but it is the loss of the furniture, the loss of the home and the clothing, and the consequent discouragement. When the good people of Omaha come in contact with these worthy paupers and people who lost their humble homes they should encourage them. Find the man work and thus strengthen him for the future struggle for food for himself and family and help the woman in obtaining clothing for herself and children.

"The people who were stricken are facing the situation heroically. Complainers are few. They are willing to take up their work again if they can have a little sympathetic help to bridge over this juncture. In the words of the Master, 'Carry ye one another's burdens.'

CRIPPLED GIRL'S DOG IS SAVED BY EARNEST PLEAS. A. J. Dalinsky, 221 South Twenty-sixth street, entered a complaint against a vicious dog owned by A. J. Gibson, 222 Spaulding street, which he asserted had bitten his 3-year-old son on the cheek. Mr. Gibson brought a half dozen witnesses to the police court, as well as the dog, to testify as to the gentleness of the animal.

Mr. Gibson demonstrated the dog's gentleness by running his fingers through the animal's mouth and stroking his neck. Ruth Gibson, a 1-year-old daughter, then began pleading with her father, asking him not to let anyone kill the dog, as he was her best friend and would play with her when other children could not get around fast enough.

The judge, moved by what the youngest had said, dismissed the case, advising that the dog be kept in his own yard.
