

REPENTANCE OF DR. OSLER

From the Shadows of Peasitism, He Emerges as a Vehicle of Joy.

Dr. William Osler, now 54 years old, an LL.D. by the grace of half a dozen of the world's greatest universities, regius professor of medicine at Oxford, is one of the few men whose names have become verbs. "To Oslerize" means "to asphyxiate painlessly."

off the past, and another that will shut off the future, and you will have a vaccine that will insure you against all morbid thought. * * * Live for the present. The control of the mind as a working machine is the end of all education. Take care of yourselves, that you may have the greater usefulness. "Never hurry."

Let us congratulate Dr. Osler. There is more joy in heaven over one scientist, who repents than over ninety and nine who never see the need of repentance. As a life pilot, Oxford regius professor points the way to 100 years of usefulness, instead of the forty which he allowed when he made the verb "to Oslerize" a sort of compass for the death pilots. It's a safe prophecy that the sunset of his life will be rosy with the promise of a cheerful morrow where the clouds can never come.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Few writers of distinction have escaped these lapses, from Shakespeare, who refers in "Julius Caesar" to clocks some fourteen centuries before they were invented, and who makes cannon thunder in "Henry VIII" and introduces a pistol in "Henry V." to the modern novelist, who places Bombay in Bengal.

to life again, a mistake which he noticed himself and to which he draws the attention of the reader, but which it would have been difficult to alter subsequently. One of the best known poetical quotations ever embodied a classic blunder, which is hardly ever noticed, although the lines are in daily use. These are Milton's "Thick as autumnal leaves that strow the brooks in Vallombrosa." The simile is beautiful, but inaccurate, for the trees in Vallombrosa are pines, which are not in the habit of casting their leaves in autumn.

and a prison on each hand." These words would actually imply the existence of two prisons and two palaces, which Byron certainly did not mean. Every reader of Herrick, and a good many people who have never read his lyrics know the line, "Her eyes the glowworms' land they." The confusion of ideas is natural enough, but naturalists stake their reputation on the glowworms being, in fact, sightless.—London Globe.

FAMOUS LITERARY BLUNDERS

Writers of High and Average Degree Slip a Cog Occasionally.

The blunders of literary men and women are not only very often amusing, but they possess a peculiar fascination. There are

A New York Dressmaker's Stock

Goes on Sale Monday Morning at About 57 1/2c on the Dollar

Mr. J. L. Orkin happened to be "Johnny-on-the-spot" when the stock was offered for sale and fully realizing the extraordinary values he could offer the women of Omaha, snapped it up in a hurry

The stock consists of silks, velvets, laces, linings, notions, findings, etc., just such lines as every dressmaker of any note carries in stock—materials that are now in great demand for spring and summer dresses, suits, etc., a trifle more than half the real value or real worth.

It's Doubtful if You Ever Shared in Such Marvelous Values as These Included in This Sale for Monday
