Relocations Made. This, however, is not in reality the case. For, with a light mold-board breaking plow, the sod may be turned back and, as it curls up, a discoloration different from the prevailing local color of the sod appears. Then, with spades sharpened to a beveled edge by files carried for that purpose, these discolorations may be "shaved" and the outlines of an original pit soon appear. The charred grasses and foreign soil and sands, which filled it, showing plainly in texture and color against the homogeneous soil of its sides. The remaining pits may soon be disclosed and the original corner restored and perpetuated by the cement and brass-capped monument now used.

To the men now doing the field work and finding, after the elapse of many years, those hurriedly made, misplaced and lost corners nothing appeals to them as out of the ordinary day's work; it is taken as a matter of course; so does the chemist in the course of his labors think little of some of the things he does, but to the casual observer, they are little short of miraculous. If Sherlock Holmes had only taken up this as a theme for one of his stories, no fiction would have been needed. The wandering and hesitating steps of the original government surveyors in a wild region forty or fifty years ago, can now be followed, when every vestige or indication of their work had apparently disappeared, and their work legally perpetuated without cost and worry to the settler of Uncle Sam's domain.

Recent decisions of the Nebraska supreme court vastly helped the government in this respect, especially in the state of Nebraska against Ball and Bachelor two decisions were rendered; one upheld the doctrine of proportional measurement and the last emphasizes the well known legal fact that the original government corners are unchangeable and no state or county surveyor can build a corner that conflicts with it that the original footsteps of the first government survey must be followed and that no more than thirty-six sections comprise a township. True the state of Nebraska lost in the case about 120 acres but the more important thing gained by the state was the legal decisions required to perpetuate the remaining school lands for the future use of its school children.

Strict co-operation, the continued employment from year to year of competent men and businesslike methods have reduced the cost of survey to less than $4 per mile, and last season's work amounted to more than 2,000 miles. All these lines were double checked and double chained, and one man's work checked against the other, making errors impossible.

Building Notes

The Scott-Rawitzer company finds the demand for sleeping porch curtains and for curtains and awnings for sunrooms has greatly increased this year. Mr. Scott of this firm expects a banner season. This company is always trying to get new designs and is busy experimenting with different patterns, designs and materials in order to get the best, so that now it has practically all the styles that any market affords. At present five different crews of this firm are busy in the ornate district putting up awnings. The assortment of materials and the prices from which to choose give the buyer an opportunity to get exactly what he wants.

The Gate City Tent and Awning company is located at 214-16 South Twelfth street, in the building formerly occupied by the Scott Tent and Awning company. It is only a few months old, but is making rapid progress. Its line of tents, awnings, etc., is large and it is ready to take care of all orders. W. H. Luebke, formerly with the Scott Tent and Awning company, is manager of the firm.

Barker Bros. Paint company 1604 1/2 Farnam street, is having large sales on its Spot-Late Cleaner. This product is used for washing all painted and varnished surfaces and is one of the best ever made. It will clean painted walls without leaving streaks, and is used on the inside or outside of house. During the last few years the demand has grown for painted walls and decorations, and flat washable paints have covered thousands of yards of plastered surfaces and when it was time to wash such decorations it was found to require skilled washers to produce good results and often then they cannot remove radiator smoke, gas smoke, dirt and grease that has become fixed upon the surface of the paint, owing largely to the kind of soap or other washing preparations employed which contain eating or caustic properties.

Superfluous Hair Truths
