GEORGE W. BERGE TALKS IN PLACE OF GOVERNOR

An urgent engagement in Lincoln necessitated the absence of Governor John H. Morehead from the rally of the Tri-city Baraca union last night at the First Congregational church, before which assembly he was to have spoken.

Mr. Berge, an attorney of Lincoln, delivered the address of the evening. Skyrockets should be sent up every Saturday night to remind the people of the Sabbath and their religious duties.

Mr. Berge stated, and further on he said violence should be resorted to to induce them to perform their obligations to God if no other means could be employed to compel them to worship their Saviour.

Lincoln is in dire need of reformation, he went on to say in his talk, but believed the returns of the election a week from today would not change the existing conditions.

"If the good people of my city would band themselves together and go to the poles in a body election day an administration would be put in office which would make the state capital a model city."

"Church affairs should be put on a practical basis," continued the speaker. "The weakest point in the church is the impracticability of its members. If they were more academic the religious sects of today would control the civic as well as the church organizations."

The South Omaha Swedish Lutheran church was awarded the banner for the largest attendance. Some 300 members of the unions and friends attended the rally.

A musical program was given before Mr. Berge's speech.

DEGREES TO CREIGHTON MEN

Graduates of Three Colleges of the University Finish Work.

JOSEPH FOLK ADDRESSES THEM Former Governor of Missouri Tells Young Men and Women of Duties and Duties of Citizenship.

Another regiment, comprised of "soldiers of peace," was recruited into the army of professionalism last night at the Brandeis theater when ninety-four students who had completed courses at the Creighton colleges of law, medicine and dentistry, were given their "magnifica of war."

The Brandeis theater was crowded from orchestra circle to gallery with friends and relatives of the huge class and many admirers of the university, while no doubt there was a good number who attended to hear the speech by Joseph W. Folk, former governor of Missouri, who made the address to the graduates.

Several numbers were offered by the Creighton orchestra, which received its share of the audience's enthusiasm. There was nothing monotonous about the commencement exercises, even the usual formality of giving to each graduate his diploma being dispensed with in sight of the audience.

The large class presented an admirable picture, the members seated on the platform in rows according to their height and in sections according to the class to which they belonged.

Folk Points the Way. "Soldiers of Peace," was what Mr. Folk characterized the graduates. That was the title of his address, in which he gave many of his well known views on political corruption, duties of citizenship and the general necessity for public education, morally and character.

"It is the man who lives for his country rather than he who dies for it, that the country needs now," he told the graduates, "and the man who gives his time and energy and influence for the betterment of mankind is just as useful as the man who bares his breast to bullets."

Much of Mr. Folk's address was on the power of the individual in a republic and of the impotency of that republic if the individual does not exert his rights, fights against the wrong and "let the public know where he stands. Mere honesty, he declared, "is a common virtue. Negative honesty is as bad as dishonesty. The country needs men who let people know where they stand. It is not always necessary to succeed; just keep faith. A republic," said he, "is the worst kind of government, unless men take it upon themselves." To strengthen the point he recited a poem on the division of the world into "lifers" and "learners."

Life of Service. "The life sublime is the life of service. When some of the disciples of Christ disputed among themselves as to which should hold the highest offices in the kingdom of heaven, not understanding the kind of kingdom He had come to establish, they left the controversy to Him and He said: 'The one among you who shall be greatest is the servant of all.' So the life sublime is the open life."

"Under the inspiration of the spirit of civic righteousness, now abroad in the land, we are learning that the man who lives for his country may be as much of a patriot as he who dies for it. True patriotism does not abide alone in the roar of cannon, but in the every day duties of civic life as well. It is the everyday patriotism on which the safety of the republic rests, not that which lies dormant until thrilled by flying banners and martial music."

Serving One's Country. "It is a mistake to suppose one must hold office to serve his country. It is just as essential to good government for private citizens to discharge the responsibilities resting upon them as it is for the faithful carrying out of official obligations in public service. For the greatest obstacle in the way of good government—government that represents the best there is, not the worst there is—is the inactivity of good citizens."

"Whenever corruption grows up in public affairs it is not because the people govern, but because they do not govern through indifference."

Mr. Folk reviewed the changes that had been made during the past decade and ascribed them to the awakening of public interest. He told of the stamping out of gambling houses, the regulation of the liquor traffic, the introduction of primary elections and the initiative and referendum. These latter, he said, were sometimes too cumbersome for laws, but are good checks in the hands of the people who hold over public officials.

Where Government Begins. He carried the progress up to the direct election of United States senators and concluded that no plan or law can bring good government automatically; it must be brought about by the activity and aggressiveness of the average citizen. Good government must begin at home on the mother's knee, he asserted, and must be carried into the church and the university.

The greatest enemy of the government, said he, is privilege. War is being waged for the abolition of poverty, he continued. "First, we must make men rich in self-reliance, purity and wisdom and then give them an equal chance."

Mr. Folk gave Creighton university a compliment: "It is one of Omaha's best assets." He praised the work it has done and congratulated the graduates on completing courses there. He touched upon the high value of the professions represented in the class. "We are living in a wonderful age," he said, "never were greater movements in progress than those of the present in the varied fields of human arts and usefulness."

Dr. B. M. Riley delivered an interesting address on "The Advance," in which he told of the progress of Creighton university and its usefulness to the community. He also was the introducer of Mr. Folk.

Dr. A. L. Muirhead, C. J. Smyth and Dr. A. Hugh Hippie presented the candidates for degrees in the college of medicine, law and dentistry, respectively. President Eugene A. Magevney conferred the degrees and the oath was administered by Manohab B. Reese, chief justice of the Nebraska supreme court.
