

CONFESSIONAL MUST GO.

No Romanists of Montreal Assent—The Priesthood is Corrupt to the Core.

A recent dispatch from Montreal says: An extraordinary sensation has been created in Catholic circles here by the appearance of the Canada Revue with reference to the recent scandal, in which a priest was involved and the relation between the clergy and the laity generally.

The Canada Revue is a review of politics and literature, which numbers among its contributors such men as Louis Frechette, Benjamin Solte, M. Vidal, Napoleon Legendre, Pamphile Lemay, Hon. C. Longeller, Hon. J. E. Robitoux, Hon. G. F. Marchand, Honore Beaugrand.

The first article asks if, after giving to the clergy riches, consideration, respect and the highest positions, it is too much to demand that they should leave to the people their wives. The same writer invites the bishop to cast his eagle eye around him, without going very far from his palace, however, and he will no doubt discover very edifying things.

Another article says: "The diocese of Montreal is in the hands of a venerable prelate, but that he has not got the necessary energy to hold a tight rein on the clergy under his orders, events have just proved." As an instance of this, the article mentions that some months ago, while a priest was under the serious charge of clandestinely making whisky, a magistrate entered into a correspondence with the archbishop with a view to have the guilty man punished and avoid as much as possible the scandal that would result from a public arrest, but while the correspondence was going on the priest was allowed to preach a retreat in Ste. Cunegonde. After referring to Mackinonge, Chambly and Megantic scandals the article points out the equivocal position of "the Sisters of Providence, who have established a banquet catering system, and who tender, like regular cook shopkeepers, for banquets given outside of Montreal, and that without paying any patent, license or tax."

The article then turns to the confessional and declares that in view of the recent scandal we must know in whose hands we place the moral direction of our wives and children. "The time has passed when you could crush down the man who wanted to know what scenes were enacted behind those barred wickets; in the face of the ignominies that have been revealed the father of a family must also establish his right to confession, and apply it to know what has taken place between his own family and the priest, who is to day acknowledged, for the defense of the case, to be subject to human failings."

Another article, after stating that the clergy control everything, declares that this state of things has lasted too long in this province. The recent scandal reveals the fact that the corruption into which certain members of the clergy have plunged is dirtier than that into which Zola's heroes roll. "It is time that we should protect ourselves." If ecclesiastical authority will not, or cannot act and repress, then we must strike ourselves. The writer blames the confessional for the immorality he alleges to exist, and asks: "Why furnish priests with these chances? Make women confess to nuns and you will see the number of priests sensibly diminish." The writer continues in a similar strain, attributing to the clergy the most disgraceful motives for entering the church, and declares that if forced to speak again he will place before the public beings which will make their hair stand on end. An immediate and vigorous reform is demanded. "In one word, let the clergy keep away from the women and religion and the Catholics will be only the better off. This must be, and at once."

In the day that Rome abolishes the confessional her hold upon the souls and bodies of her dupes will be broken and Rome, with its penances, indulgences, relics and immorality will drift down to its foreseen, natural slough unwept, unhonored and unsung.

Romanism.

After reading the report in the American of the Cheyenne mob and the outrage upon the old soldier in St. Paul, we are forced to the conclusion that Rom, Romanism and Rebellion go hand in hand, each one aggravating the other. Romanism alone has cursed many peoples and when filled with Rum, Rebellion is as natural a product as can be produced by any set of conditions. Squeeze them all out at once from any legal or political exemptions. —Looking Glass.

More Intolerance.

A report was brought to this office that as soon as it became noised around that Cudahy, the pork packer of South Omaha, had discharged the Protestants who had attended Mayor Miller's funeral, one Ben. Flood, who has charge of the Omaha Printing Company's press room, discharged several of the Protestants working in his department. Next!

Next! Here it is. Mr. L. Neusbaum has been employed by Welsh Bros., butchers on Farnam street. One week ago last Friday he remarked that he was no Roman Catholic. The next day he was discharged. Neusbaum told his story to Geo. Wilson, whose advertisement appears in another column, and was immediately given employment.

The Pope of Rome has appointed Archbishop Satoll as legate to visit the United States. Though he does not come as a credited minister to the government at Washington, it is thought that his visit will involve important diplomatic questions. When Pope Pius IX sent Archbishop Bedinna as legate to this country, in 1853, he met with opposition and insults on nearly every quarter and was forced to return. It is expected that the leaders of the great political parties will show great respect to this Papal-American legate. They will do this for votes. We have reached a period when we are in much need of American statesmen who are independent of the control of foreign despots who are trying to subvert American institutions.—American Baptist.

CRUELTY OF PRIESTS.

Accusations of an inmate of the Yankton, S. D., Convent.

YANKTON, S. D., Oct. 27.—[Special Telegram to the Bee.]—Agnes Grosset, a member of the order of Sisters of Mercy who conduct the Sacred Heart convent in this city, has appealed to the King's Daughters, a charitable organization, for assistance. She claims to have been driven from the convent by the cruelty of the priests and mother superior of the institution, and is destitute and without friends. She has been a member of this order for four years, and for a year past has been too ill to work. The convent authorities sought to compel her to assist in the labors about the establishment, she asserts, and when she declined locked her in her room and fed her bread and water. She appears half starved, and is reluctant about telling her stories. The convent people say she is demented, and deny her charges of cruelty. She left the establishment stealthily on Thursday morning during the hour for prayers, and has found a temporary home with a neighbor.
