

NOT ALL ARE LIKE HIM

THE BRITISH CAD ABROAD IS A DISAGREEABLE PERSON.

A FELLOW COUNTRYMAN DESCRIBES THE SPANISH—A CREATURE THAT MANIFESTS HIS CONTEMPT OF EVERYTHING FOREIGN ON EVERY POSSIBLE OCCASION.

There is nothing of which, as an Englishman who has spent much of his life in foreign lands, I am more heartily ashamed than the British cad on his travels, and I would like to take this opportunity to warn such readers as may not have had occasion to visit Europe that my countrymen are not all built on the same lines as our traveling cad, and that the latter must not under any circumstances be regarded in the light of a typical Briton.

Generally speaking, the traveling cad belongs to the middle classes, although I am forced to admit that I have met quite a number of his kind who bore names that figure in the pages of Burke. The manifestations of his caddishness are prompted in a great measure by patriotism of an aggressive and offensive type which involves contempt for everything that does not happen to be English.

In no other country of the world, save perhaps in China, have I found such an undisguised contempt for the foreigner as in England. The people there are firmly convinced that everything alien is necessarily bad; that foreign opinion is not worth considering, and that when dealing with foreigners they are under no obligation to observe the conventional rules of life which govern their intercourse with their fellow countrymen. The result of all this is that no people are more justly abhorred abroad than the ordinary Briton on his travels, and even the well bred Englishman seeks by every means in his power to get out of the way of this greatest of all abominations, the tourist cad.

From the very moment that he leaves England and sets foot on a foreign shore the cad apparently casts to the winds all sense of decency and consideration for the feelings of those with whom he is brought in contact. Englishmen, and, I may add, English women, of the cad species do not seem to have the slightest consideration for their surroundings when abroad in the matter of dress; their one delight would appear to be to endeavor to offend the susceptibilities of the foreigners with whom they are brought in contact either by the inadequacy or else by the exaggerated and equally inappropriate magnificence of their attire.

Another form of caddishness on the part of the traveling Briton is the brutality and unvarnished character of his criticism of everything and everybody that he sees after leaving home. Indeed one is often tempted to ask why he should have quitted his native shores, seeing that he is so determined to find everything bad and abhorrent that is foreign. He ridicules the language, he ridicules the accent, the appearance, the manners and the dress of all those whom he encounters abroad not quietly and unobtrusively, but in the most offensive and public way, without the slightest idea of concealment. If he meets an American, he is quite as ready as not to inform him that he speaks English with a nasal twang, totally oblivious of his own vulgar cockney accent, while to the German he will expatiate on the alleged lack of cleanliness of the Teutonic race. To the Frenchman he will address what he considers to be delicate banter on the traditional fondness of the Gallic race for frogs and snails.

As for removing his hat when some religious or funeral procession passes through the street of a continental town, he would scorn the idea. I have met the British cad traveling in India, where he distinguishes himself by refusing to conform with the local prejudices and customs of the highly civilized natives, whom he amiably refers to, even to their faces, as "niggers," and in Japan, where he does not hesitate to tramp with his muddy boots over the dainty mats on which the natives both sleep and eat, I have known one of them to cheerfully volunteer to a high bred and courteous Japanese nobleman who in an ill advised moment had been induced to entertain him the information that he was "asounded by the lack of morality and propriety" of the women of the Land of the Rising Sun.

There is nothing that I should like so much as for some clever New York reporter to get hold of one of these traveling British cads on his way home, and to draw him. The mere record of the interview would furnish far more graphic illustration and portrayal of the creature than anything that I could write. The worst of the matter is that travel does not seem to in any way improve the creature. He starts out from home with the preconceived determination of finding everything foreign "beautifull"—I use his own favorite expression. Looking at everything in a jaundiced and prejudiced manner, he goes back more convinced than ever that everything that he has seen out of England is "beautifull," an opinion which he does not hesitate to express everywhere and on every occasion in the most forcible manner.

Now he is deterred therefrom by any courtesies which he may have received while on his travels, nor by any hospitality of which he may have been the object. On the contrary, his entertainer, no matter how generous or how kind, will probably constitute a theme of ridicule and will be subjected not to portrayal, but to coarse and vulgar caricature for the merriment of the friends of the British traveling cad.—New York Tribune.

EGYPT'S SACRED BIRD

The ibis, the sacred bird of Egypt, is not peculiar to that country, but is found in considerable numbers in the south, in Florida especially. In St. Augustine and other coast towns it is no unusual thing to see an ibis perched on the ridge pole of a house or stable or stalking solemnly about a yard, for the bird is easily tamed and seems to be fond of human company.—St. Louis Republic.
