THE STORY OF A DOG.

WHY A BOLITARY WAYSIDE GRAVE IS MARKED "PHANTOM."

A Lost Baby In the Wilds of Western New Meater Was Praced by the Patthful Canine-He Killed the Abductor and Led the Pather to a Covote's Don.

The tourist who visits the region of Lower Plaza, N. M., will see, among ville, where the common roads then other things, as he drives along the trail ended, the town was agog to see the from the railroad a grave with a thick headboard on which is painted the one word, "Phantom."

"It's only a dog's grave," the guide will explain, "but I reckon he'd more sense than some men."

Phantom was the property of Bernard mountains some years ago, but he was buried near the home of Daniel Chapman, whose wife was the sister of Wisner. Mrs. Chapman, when her brother first got the dog, had a hearty dislike for It was a big mongrel, with hound blood predominating, and, like all mongrel bounds, it had an enormous appetite that was never so well satisfied as with food stolen from somebody's kitchen.

For many offenses of this kind Mrs. Chapman had good reason to complain, and she would have taken the winchester and shot the hateful brute on more than one occasion but for two reasons. it's him!" And they then proceeded to It was a very good hunting dog, and it shake hands with him, the rest of the would now and then play with the baby when she wanted to do housework-come over from her brother's house a mile away as if for the express purpose of having a romp with the little tot of 3.

However, the dog's manner kept growing worse, and one day when she saw it come sneaking around the corral she started for the gun, but stopped half way because she was reminded by the sight of the dog that the little one had not been about the house for an hour or two, perhaps more, so far as she could remem ber. So she ran out of the house quickly without the gun and called aloud: "Baby! Baby!"

Then she listened and grew faint, for she heard no reply, and fainter still when she remembered that her husband had told her of seeing a panther's tracks down in the hollow near by. To think of this was to send her flying toward the hollow, but no baby or trace of it was to be found, although she looked behind every one of the scattered pines and cedars growing there. Then she came running back to the house, ringing her hands and calling "Baby" distractedly. She found the dog standing right beside the door, but she would not have noticed him, she was so near wild about the baby, only for the fact that he stood looking intently at her instead of taking to his heels with his tail between his legs, as he always done when she came toward public.

Even as it was she paid little attention to the dog, but ran hither and you about the house and corral and horse shed, crying and calling the child, until at last she saw the dog come square before her, and after a grave look into her face start running around the house with his nose to the ground. She remembered afterward that he circled around the house two or three times and then disappeared, but by that time her fears had so overcome her that she fell headlong on the floor in a faint, and there she lay nobody knows how long.

When she came to her senses, the dog was licking her face, and at once began to caper about and bark in extraordinary fashion when she opened her eyes and sat up. Then he ran out the door and stopped and looked back, and directly came back and grabbed the skirt of her dress, which he pulled so hard that he tore it. Then she picked up a club and drove the dog out the house, and when her burst of anger was over fainted again at the thought of the lost baby. When she revived this time, she was too weak to get up, but she saw that the dog was still acting in the same unusual fashion she had noticed before. A little later the sound of horse's hoofs gladdened her ears, and with a last effort she got up, staggered out the door, saw her husband as he jumped from his horse, and, gasping out the words that "Baby is lost," fainted for the third time.

Chapman carried the woman to the bed, took one look around the room in order to assure himself that he had rightly understood what she had said, and then grabbing the winchester said to the dog:

"Hi, Phantom! where's Baby?" "Wow!" replied the dog, and started away on a lope that kept Dan humping himself to equal. The trail zigzagged about for nearly half a mile, then crossed a broken lava bed and ran off down a draw to the creek valley. Had any other dog than Phantom been on the trail Dan would have not believed the child could have gone that way, but he banked on Phantom and kept trotting along until at last a thicket was reached just two miles and a half from home. Into the thicket the dog plunged by what was really a sort of tunnel through the brush, and Chapman had to get down on his hands and knees to follow. Two rods in he came to an opening, and there on the dry sod lay the baby fast asleep. It was apparently in the den of some wild ani-

As Dan picked up the child the growl of the dog made him look around. Phantom was standing over the dead body of a recently killed coyote.

Phantom died of old age last spring, and was buried with many tears near the public highway, where all who pass can see it. It was only a dog that was buried there; but, then, as the cowboys say, "I reckon he'd more sense than some men."—Cor. New York Sun.

The coming of the party was of course made known along the track it would follow, and at Krene-"philosophers," as they were at once collectively called. But neither Emerson nor Lowell was known, Agassiz being the only celebrity to that world, owing to his having recently refused the offer by the emperor of France of the keepership of the Jardin des Plantes at Paris and a senatorship with a large sal-Wisner, a cowboy living near the Datil ary, he preferring to devote himself to

How Did the Dollar Mark Originate?

Below I give five theories of the origin of the dollar mark ($), they being selected from about 20 seemingly plausible solutions:

That it is a combination of the "U.S.," the initials of United States.

That it is a modification of the figure 8, the dollar being formerly called a 'piece of eight."

That it is derived from a representation of the Pillars of Hercules, consisting of two needlelike towers or pillars connected with a scroll. The old Spanish coins marked with the pillar device were frequently referred to as "pillar dollars.

That it is a combination of "H. S.," the ancient Roman mark of money unit. That it is a combination of P. and S. from peso duro, signifying "hard dol-In Spanish accounts peso is contracted by writing the S. over the P., and placing it over the sum.

According to one writer the symbol of the dollar is a monogram of the letters "V" "S" and "J," the dollar being originally a "thaler" coined in the valley of Sant Joachim, Bohemia, and known as "Joachim thaler," and the monogram the initials of the words, "Valley Sant Joachim."-St. Louis Re-

Courtesy Among the Swedes.

The Swedes are a quiet, taciturn people. There is no jostling even among the lowest classes. When a train leaves a platform or a steamboat a pier, the lookers on lift their hats to the departing passengers and bow to them, a compliment which is returned by the passengers. You are expected to lift your hat to the shabbles t person you meet in the street, and to enter a shop, office or bank with the hat on is considered a bad breach of good manners. In retiring from a restaurant you are expected to bow to the occupants. Bowing and hat lifting is so common that the people seem to move around more slowly than elsewhere, in order to observe the courtesy.-F. H. Stauffer in Kate Field's Washington.
