Emile Olivier, Premier of Napoleon III., will probably complete by the end of the year his great work on the war of 1870, and of which he recently said: "I shall especially point out that our misfortunes were due to a lack of commanders, and not to the greater strength of the enemy. The Germans have said this long ago, but in France it does not appear to be recognized."

Dr. H. C. Potter, the well known Michigan railway manager, heard Gladstone speak at the great Weish Eisteddfod at Wrexham, and he says of the Grand Old Man: "He spoke for an hour without notes and the whole thing was a revelation to me of his power over men. The grace of it, bie play of wit, the light of his smile, and his recognition of all those things that his audience have most at heart, were the work of a master. He dealt with the history, the wars, the repressions of the Weish people, their religion, their literature, their music, their bravery, their hardiness, their frugality and encour aged them to maintain their nationality."

It has been alleged that John Bunyan was a plagiarist and that The Pilgrim's was a plagiarist and that The Pilgrim's Progress is a literal translation from the French of a work entitled Ye Pilgrimage of Ye Sowle, by Guillaume de Guileville, a monk of the fifteenth century, a translation of which was printed by Caxton, in 1483. It is believed that a copy of the original French manuscript is to be found either in the British museum or the Bodleian, and it might be worth while to search for it, in order that it a question may be decided. If Bunyan's originality had been doubted while Lord Macaulay was alive he would very quickly have taken steps to ascertain the truth. Bunyan was undoubtedly accused of plagiarism by his contemporaries, but modern reviewers and biographers have ignored these charges. His Holy War appears to have been anticipated by St. Bernard, the translation of whose Spiritual Combat is to be found in a book now in the British museum, entitled A Hive of Sacred Honie Combes, which was printed at Doway, in 1631.—Labouchere in London Truth.

A Paim View of Home

A Paim View of Home.

The following strange story was related to us by the mate of a merchant vessel, personally known by us to be a gentleman of the highest character and reliability and may be of interest to students of psychology. While his ship was loading at Calcutta, he accepted the invitation of a native to visit his home. The native was a peddler of the lowest class and previously unknown to the officer. On arriving at the hovel of the Hindu, he introduced his father, an emaciated old man of great age, but with piercingly brilliant eyes. After greeting the young American a few minutes he commanded him to look into the palm of his hand. Although at first unwilling to comply with the request, he felt himself constrained to do so, and, on looking down, saw before him in his hand a perfect vision of a room in his distant New England home, with the different members of the family seated around a table. Although a man of iron nerves, our friend confessed that it was some time before he recovered his equanimity. We forbear to comment on this incident, only remarking that it seems better authenticated than most similar stories.—Popular Science News. better authenticated than most similar stories.—Popular Science News.

A Photographic Umpire.

The following proposition, according to the Photographische Archiv, has been made by a professor and teacher of the Royal Photographic school of Vienna. It is to apply photography in deciding races in which the result may be doubtful. In place of the decision of the judge, who may err sometimes, it is proposed to accept the unfailing dictum of the camera. For this purpose six cameras are to be placed in line at the winning post, a few feet apart, and directed toward the race course, which may be exposed simultaneously by the agency of electricity. As soon as the leading horse reaches the first camera all the cameras are exposed. The plates may be developed in from two to three minutes, and the result will unmistakably show which horse is the netual winner.

The Swedish Domestic's Popularity. The Swedish colony in Brooklyn is growing larger every year, and that the city benefits by the acquisition is a self evident fact. The Swedes are frugal and law abiding, and in a short time become good citizens. They live princi-pally on Atlantic avenue, between Court and Smith streets, and in adjacent thor-oughfares, and many of them own and successfully run small shops and saloons. With housewives Swedish servants have always been penalar, and I am told that always been popular, and I am told that the supply falls far short of the demand for them. The Swedish domestic never comes to this country unless she Talmage advises the young men to strike previously made some arrangement for obtaining work immediately on her arcouraging to have it supplemented by the girl's father, who advises them to light out whom she can stay. The result is that Swedish "help" is engaged before it reaches America, and consequently servants of this nationality are hard to obtain.-Brooklyn Eagle.

Galcaville (Ill.) Independent, Oct. 5 Galesville was considerably excited the other day, by a report that a twentieth of ticket number 44,545 which drew the third capital prize of $50,000 in the September drawing of the Louisinna State Lottery at New Orleans, was held by a party in Galesville. Inquiry soon elicited the fact that the lucky per-son was Chas. T. Silk, one of our best known citizens. An Independent re-porter interviewed Mr. Silk on Monday and clicited the following facts: For some time he had been investing a small sum each month in tickets, and had several times drawn small prizes. He had confidence that if he kept on he would at last be successful, and the result shows at last be successful, and the result shows the correctness of this impression. In the September drawing he had ten tickets, and three of them drew prizes, two of $30 each, and one of $2,500, one-twentieth of the third capital prize. Mr. Silk is a poor man, and this great good fortune will enable him to make many improverements about his home, and his good fortune will be shared by all of our citizens, who rejoice with him in his good fortune. good fortune.

Polson Conveyed by the Teeth

The poison conveyed by the human teeth is found by physicians to be one of the most troublesome they have to deal with. One of them writes: "I have unwith. One of them writes: "I have under my attention severe and most complicated cases of blood-poisoning, in which the patient had but slightly abraided the hand in the course of a fight by striking the knuckles against the teeth of his opponent. I have known hands thus poisoned only saved from amputation by the application of all resources of science. Tobacco or whisky or derangement of the stomach from any other causes may be responsible for this poisonous condition of the teeth, and I am not prepared to say that a man with am not prepared to say that a man with good health and a clean, sweet mouth would not convey the poison."
