Indefinite Stories.

New York Evening Sun.

"Speaking of flash literature reminds me of a deceased friend of mine," said Bryan McSwyny yesterday. "The person was engaged in writing a serial story for a well-known weekly paper. The story had run so long that the publishers wrote to my friend to bring it to an end in the next installment. He did so in the following unique manner:

"The balloon rose slowly from the foot of the eliff, bumping along the face of the rock as it did so. Anzelina, frightened at the prospect of the perilous journey ahead when the oalloon was 1,000 feet from the ground, jumped recklessly out upon the shelf of rock which projected from the face of the cliff. Frenzied with fear, Algernon followed his love, and the balloon sailed away. Algernon clasped the lovely maiden to his heaving bosom in a passionate embrace. The shadows deepened, and night fell like a black pall upon the

THE END.

"Well," continued Bryan, "letters began to arrive at the office of publication asking such faithful ques-tions as these: "What became of the lovers? Did they dry up and blow away? Did the buzzards feed upon the form of the lovely Angelina? Did some one let a rope down from the top of the cliff and pull 'em For heaven's sake what became of them?

These letters accumulated so fast in the office that the publishers ask-ed my friend for another installment of the story, which he gladly wrote, the concluding sentences of the last chapter being as follows:

"The long night passed slowly away with leaden tread. The eastern sky began to flush with the first beams of morning light. Outlined against the fleecy clouds Angelina could see a faint speck about as big as a door knob. The speck gradu-ally grew larger as the two lovers gazed hungerily upon it. It was their long-lost balloon. A favoring gale from heaven directed the ballrecident, or his own disobedience of gale from heaven directed the ball-verience rules. There is some little con to the cliff, and it was watted against the face of the cliff. As it came nearer and nearer to their resting place Algernon said, in a husky whisper.

"Now Lena, my heart's love, jump when I jump!"

They jumped and clung like spid-ers to the netting until Algernon had descended to the car. Then, like the hero he was, Algernon rescued his darling one from her perilous position, and laid her upon the floor of the car.

"Higher and higher the balloon rose until a band of Indians who were watching it saw it gradually dwindle down to the size of an apple, then faded away until only a speck like the head of a pin remained, and then was lost in the shadowy realms of space."

THE END.

"Well, what did the publishers this time?'

"Oh," replied Bryan, with a smile, "they simply discharged my triend,

An Untimely Death Notice,

From the Boston Transcript.

A story that goes back to the meetin' house in Wrentham is one of a worthy man named Habbakuk Pwho had been blessed with four wives, one after another. Habbakuk was always in his pew on the Sabbath. He sat there in his conspicuous pew Sunday morning after their marriage. There was a stranger in the pulpit who had exchanged with the venerable Mr. F-, the pastor of the church. After reading a few scripture passages the strang-er proceeded to read a notice which he had found in the Bible and which was as follows:

Habbakuk P--desires the prayer of the congregation that the death of his wife may be sanctified to him for his spiritual good."

Then, when the congregation was between stupefaction and explosion, the clergyman went on with his services at a rapid rate. He was at a loss to know why the congregation seemed to be throughout the remainder of the service on the point of laughter, but at dinner Mrs. F the pastor's wife, explained to him that Habbakuk P—sat thre rows from the front in the broad isle, with his brand new wife, and he had read an old notice that Mr. F-had probably been using for a book-mark ever since the death of wife No. 3.

Sothern's Joke.

"Were you acquainted with Sothern?" was asked of John Toole, the aged English comedian.

"Dundreary? Ah, yes! He was the most amusing creature on earth. You remember that absurb trick of his, when he asked eighty people to supper, and wrote a private note to each man beforehand to ask him to be so good as to say grace, as the chairman was unavoidably prevented from attending the dinner. The faces of those eighty men when they rose in one body, at the tap on the table, which Sothern had severally informed them was to be the signal for grace, must have been a sight indeed."-San Francisco Chronicle.

A Dinner in Stam.

Miss Fleeson, of Pittsburg, now missionary out in Siam, had the honor, lately, to dine with the king and queen of that country, in their new and splendid summer palace. The ceremony began with the washing of all hands in perfumed waters, held in silver bowls, after which a golden chest of betel, the Siamese equivalent for tobacco and Siamese equivalent for tobacco and chewing gum, was passed around—but the use of it was not de riguer, and the foreigners were given tea in place of the flery quid. The dinner, which was served in the most exquisite of chins, served in the most exquisite of china, glass and silver, came on in twenty courses, and after it his majesty, who was garbed in pure white, with gold and purple trimmings, had his prize scrobats and jugglers perform upon a platform below the dining hall, for the amusement of the guests.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Mr. Fred A. Young, treasurer of the Union Eyelet Company, of this city, purchased for $1 the twentieth part of ticket No. 2,887 in the Louisiana State Lottery. The ticket at the recent drawing took the $300,000 prize and entitled Mr. Young to one-twen-tieth of the sum, viz., $15,000. The gentleman was credited by the Tele-gram with having this stroke of luck about two weeks ago, but a denial appeared in one of the papers. This morning the Telegram learned that the money had been collected for Mr. Young through the Bank of America Young through the Bank of America of this city. At the bank no information could be obtained, the tellers having apparently been instructed to furnish no facts for publication. At the office of the Eyelet Company a Telegram reporter found Mr. Young and learned that the ticket bought by him through the Boston agency had indeed won the money, and that the the bank named. His object for keeping the news of his great luck from the masses, he said, was because he thought that it would stimulate so many others less able than himself to hubble in lettery ticket to invest to indulge in lottery tickets to invest their dollars. Just why those with less means than himself should not desire $15,000 Mr. Young did not state, but he did say that he objected to the general public being made aware of his good fortune.
