Negotiations that have been pending for sometime past have recently been closed whereby Mr. L. J. Simmons, for-merly of the Nebraska Beporter, of Seward, Neh., has purchases an interest in this paper and will be here this coming week to take editorial charge of the same. Mr. Simmon, is a newspaper man of more than ordinary ability and experience. The Nebraska Reporter says of him:

"L J. Simmons, who has been con-needed with The Reporter for more than six years, will leave in a few days for Harrison, Sioux county, where he has purchased The Sioux County Journal. Although his name has rarely appeared in the columns of the paper, he hat for several years past, had entire costrol of both the local and business detments, and has done highly satisfacwork in both. He has a thorough estanding of the work of a country spaper office, and ought to make a ess in his new venture. The writer ht be accused of being a little partial to eard his brother, but he feels confi-der that the people of Seward will ene the statement that Lou, is energet ic, possessed of good principles and not lacking in ability. After a residence of needy fifteen years in Seward county he goe we believe, with the good wishes of all who know him. The people of Sioux

DRINK AND DANGER. Write t on the liquor store, Write it on the prison door, Write it on the gin shop fin Write, oh, write this truthful line: Write it on the work house gate, Write it on the school boy's slate. Write it on the copy book, That the young may in it look; Where there's drink, there's danger Write it on the church yard mound, Where the drink slain dead are found:

Write it on the gallows high, Write it for all passers by: Where there's drink, there's danger Write it underneath your feet, Write it on the busy street, Write it for the great and small,

In the mansion, cot, or hall: Where there's drink, there's danger Write it on our ships which sail. Borne along by steam and gale; Write it in large letters, plain, O'er our land and 'cross the main: Where there's drink, there's danger. Write it always in the home,

Year by year from good and right, Proving with resistless might, Where there's drink there's danger. Write it for the rising youth, Write it for the cause of truth, Write it for your fatherland,

Write-'tis duty's stern command-Where there's drink, there's danger. While some claim that "Prohibition does not prohibit," and is of but little effect in the states where it is the law, we are cheered by many an assurance such as follows: William Sunday, the base ball player, said in a recent speech at Pittsburgh: "My occupation for the past few years has carried me over a large portion of the United States. I have been a close observer, and I have noticed that in communities where the sale of liquor is prohibited, either by state laws or local option, there is the greatest prosperity, the tion of her whereabouts. greatest happiness and the nearest equality among the people. There are some people who are slow to see the virtue of this movement for temperance. Why, this is so is a mystery to me. There are men coming in here to talk for prohibition who come from states where it has been tried. They have lived under it, and like it. Is that not proof of its virown knowledge that Iowa was never more prosperous than she is to-day. What has done this? Prohibition."

Let the good work go on. "Mayor Harding, of Fort Wayne, Indiana, last week issued a proclamation that all saweek issued a proclamation that all sawith diamond on left hip, and the other Saturday night and remain closed Sun-day. In the Streets.

"Put yourself in his place," is the rule if a man would like to know how his tried neighbor feels. Like many another good rule, however, it is not to be too rigorously insisted upon. There are some forms of suffering concerning which the most sympathetic man may be willing to form an opinion by observation and reasoning rather than by experience. Lord Camden, lord chief justice of England, was walking with his host, Lord Dacre, an absent minded man. As they were passing the parish stocks

Lord Camden said: "I wonder whether a man in the stocks suffers physical pain? I'm inclined to think that, apart from the sense of shame, he suffers nothing, unless the boys pelt him with brickbats.

"Settle the doubt by putting your feet into the holes," said Lord Dacre. "I will?" exclaimed Camden, and he sat down and put his feet into the holes. "Now Dacre," said he, "fasten the bolts and leave for ten minutes." Lord Dacre did so, but quickly forgot his distinguished guest, who sat awaiting his return with his feet fifteen inches higher than his seat, and his feet encircled by hard wood. Acute pains shot along the confined limbs; his feet ached, and cramps seized, the muscles of the thighs. Faintness, giddiness, and thirst increased his discomfort.

A peasant passing by was implored by the prisoner to liberate him, and answered with a meer of derision. A clergy-man, on being told by the prisoner that would have gone over to almost certain for on Thursday. This is only another he was Lord Camden, exclaimed: "Ah! death. It was a very narrow escape but case of justice as administered by the mad with liquor. 'Tis droll, though, no injury was done except to the buggy county county.

For ten hours the poor judge sat in the stocks. When at last he was taken out and carried to his host's house his miserable plight had settled in his mind that the punishment of the stocks is attended by great physical suffering. A year or two after Lord Camden presided at a trial in which a workman brought an action against a magistrate who had wrongfully placed him in the stocks. The counsel for the magistrate attempted to laugh the case out of court, and made merry at the workman's statement that he had suffered intense pain during his confinement.

"Brother were you ever in the stocks?" whispered Lord Camden, leaning forward.

"Never, my lord," answered the as tonished lawyer.

"Well, I have been, and let me as sure you that the agony is awful."-Youth's Companion.
