We are happy to say that this sudden wealth has not fallen into the hands of a Coal Oil Johnny man, who squanders it in a reckless manner. But on the other hand it has come into the hands of a discretionate and worthy man, who will make proper use of it. To be sure he may possibly feel somewhat clated, as he has good reason to be, but when he was handed over this fortune he was as cool and reticent as a judge when he passed sentence. This sum certainly comes in very nice, as he had very little more than his wages to fall back on. Pather and Son. The deaths of ex-Judge W. B. Brown

The deaths of ex-Judge W. B. Brown and Frank Brown, his son, only three hours apart, were most singular and sad, writes a New Philadelphia (O.) correspondent. The son had a deep affection for his father, who was on a bed of sickness and not expected to live. Frank had repeatedly warned the family that when the hour arrived for his father to die they would not be separated, but would cross the river of death hand in hand. True to his prediction and wish, would cross the river of death hand in hand. True to his prediction and wish, when the father was passing quietly away and the hour of dissolution had arrived, the son, who had been in his usual good health, threw up his hand as an indication that he, too, was ready, and fell dead to the floor. The father never recovered consciousness, but died three hours later. Their ages were 84 and 36 respectively.
