THE SHOUX COUNTY JOURNAL.

J. SIMMONS, Pr

HABRISON. NEBRASKA

EDUCATIONAL COLUMN.

On-education in colleges is the sub-st of an excellent article in the Janunumber of Education, written by I. Pickard, formerly president of the state university of lows, and now lecturer on political science in that institution. As the writer is a westorn man he is heartily in favor of co-education. He takes up the three chief arguments of these opposed to it, and answers them in a straightforward, logical way that appeals to the reason, and convinces one that the writer fully believes what he is saying.

The first of these arguments is that there are sexual differences of intellect no less than there are of body. But his answer is that while there may be differences, there are still more simi-larities; and that no one is competent to say where the line shall be drawn that points out those differences that do exist. The advanced colleges of today, whether co-educational or not, realize that there are no two minds of either sex exactly alike. Therefore they arrange such a variety in courses of study that it is not necessary for any two students to pursue exactly the same lines of work from the day of matriculation to the day of graduation. Why then, can woman not find courses and work suited to her nature, even though that nature differs somewhat from her brothers?

The second argument is that the delicate bloom of womanliness will be lost by frequent and intimate contact with the opposite sex, such contact as is rendered necessary in co-educational study. He says that if he had, at any time in his experience in co-educational colleges, observed any influence in those institutions that tended to make the men less manly, or what is of more importance, to make the women less womanly, he would be one of the first to protest against the mingling of the sexes in colleges. But all his experience points the other way.

The last objection of which he speaks is that woman is not physically equal to the demands of a course that a man can carry. But he asks, why may not a woman be supposed to have sufficient judgment to choose work suited to her strength as well as a man? Moreover he gives statistics to show that where there is a difference in the per cent o: mortality of women and men graduates it is less in the case of the women than in the case of the men. In con clusion, in view of the fact that no good argument can be brought forward against co-education in colleges, he urges the economical value of such an arrangement; since each institution now co-educational would have to be duplicated in every particular, in buildings, in labratories and equipments, in libraries, and in faculties, in order to do as much and as good educational work separately.

Co-education is so general in the west that it is almost with surprise that we learn of the opposition to it, in the East. There recently appeared in a 1 : ding Boston daily an editorial bittery condemning the attempts to open

Great Exel NEW ORLEANS, La., Jan. 27. -

Algiers a suburb of New Orleans, was the scene a murder and lynching last night. The victim of popular fary was William Fister, a negro with a peritentiary record, and his crime, the nurder of Thomas Barret, a sailor on the morgan steamer Aransas. Fister had been a lounger in the neighborhood of a grocery store on the corner of Atlantic and Peter streets. Yesterday the proprietess sent him to buy some oysters. When he returned with the pail Mrs. McMann took Fister to task for getting so few oysters, and the latter becoming angry at her remarks seized a butcher knife and slashed the unfortunate woman's throat, Her cries for help brought a man nam McKnight to the scene, and he in turn was set upon by the negro, who struck him over the head with the hatchet. Fister then turned and ran into a side alley, but he had not proceeded far when Barrett overtock him. As quick as a flash the negro drew a pocket knife and stabbed his pursuer three times. Barrett fell dead in his tracks and the murder continued his flight By this time a crowd had gathered and the negro was compelled to seek a hiding place. A shed in the alley was the only available place and here h took refuge. His safety, however, washort lived. The mob soon reaches the spot and before the negro coul turn upon his pursuers, a pistoi sho rang out and he fell wounded and helpless. By this time somebody had secured a rope and no time was lost in making it useful. Fister was draggeo to the street, one tied the rope around his neck and it was thrown over the limb of a tree and the boly was jerked into the air. For a time grea excitement reigned.

Caplured at L at

KEOKUK, Ia., Jan. 27.-Last night Deputy United States Marshal Eta ridge, of Des Moines, and an officer of the secret service brought in from Centerville, Ia., Frank McCoy H was indicted at the last term of court for counterfeiting silver coins. He is a member of the gang headed by the venerable Green Caton, who have been operating on the border between lowa and Missouri. When the old man was captured last year McCov and son of Caton escaped inte Missouri. Young Caton was arrested and is serving time in the Missouri penitentiary for passing counterfeit coins, but McCoy succeeded in eluding officers until yesterday. When he waarrested he was working as a farm hand near Dean. Iowa.

Bishop Philips Brooks.

Boston, Jan. 26 .- With impressivfuneral services in the opiscopa church, the remains of Bishop Phillip Brooks yesterday were laid to rest in Auburn cemetery. From 8 to 110 'clock yesterday morning the remains lay in state under a catafaique in the vest bule of Trinity church. A guard o members of the Royal Legion of which the dead bishop was an honorary member, kept vigil on either side of the black casket, while a throng of people passed continuously through the vestibule to take a last look at the familiar features of the dead prelate Refused to Make the Payment NEW YORK, Jan. 27.-The Herald special correspondent at Washington says: "The navy department has refused to make the payment of the Chilean indemnity to anyone except the sallors of the Baltimore themselves in the case of the two deceased sailors to their legal heirs. As far as the department officials are concerned the beneficiaries will be under no obliga tions to pay-attorney fees. The department considers the indemnity in the nature of a present to the injures sailors and not as the payment of the claims originally filed in the state de partment by a San Francisco lawyer. earn that the sum of $18,000 each is the amount recommended by the nava board to be allotted to the legal heirs o the two deceased sailors. This leave: the amount of $55,000 to be distributed among the other sailors. Whether the sailors who were imprisoned, but who did not receive any bodily injuries, with be included is a question unsettled, and it is this that is causing the delay n

DOINGS OF CONGRESS

MEASURES CONSIDERED AND ACTED UPON.

Capital-What Is Be -014 the by the Se the Sonate and House-O taposed Of and New Ones Co

The Senate and House

The Senate and House. Most of Saturday's session of the Senate so the Nicaragus Canal bill. In the course of his speech he spoke sadly of the Monros doctrine as "wore, torn and fragmentary," and as having been kicked by the Senate into wold rags." Mr. Morgan, speaking of the provision of the bill for ten Govern-men directors (out of fitteen) said that if the French government had its own direc-tors in the Panama Canal Company the pobberies which had taken place and which had disgraced and nearly destroyed the French republic would not have been per-petrated, and that the frand and corruption and williainy which was now shocking the sensibilities of that special order, but (in antagonism to it) Mr. Walcott (Rep.) of Colorado moved to proceed to the consideration of the first bill on the consideration of the first Mr. Walcott (Rep.) of Colorado moved to proceed to the consideration of the first bill on the calendar. On that motion Mr. Washburn (Rep.) of Minnesota demanded the yeas and mays, and the result was-yeas 9, mays 31-not a quorum voting After a brief executive ression the Senate adjourned. The time of the House was principally consumed in consideration of the bill ratifying the agreement with the Cherokee Nation of Indians for the cession to the United States of the tract of land known as the "Cherokee Outlet." The bill was passed and the House adjourned.

For almost an hour Monday morning the time of the House was consumed in the consideration of a resolution to which there was not the slightest opposition in any quarter, and which was finally adopted without objection. It was one calling upon the executive departments for information as to the number and amount of war claims allowed or disallowed by such departments. Then a motion to suspend the rules and pass a bill to settle the claims of Arkanass and other swamp-land grants failed to se-cure the necessary two-thirds vote, and was defeated. The motion to sus-pend the rules and pass a joint resolution for a constitutional amend-ment for the election of United States Senators by popular vote, was car-ried without a division. Three prepared speeches were read in the Senate. The first was by Mr. Morrill (Vt.), against the McGarrahan bill; the second by Mr. Peffer (Kan), in favor of a constitutional amend-ment limiting the Presidential office to one term: and the third by Mr. Call (Fla.), in defense of the constitutional is procured as the result of a call of the Senate some For almost an hour Monday morning the considerable in the second state of the second state some considerable progress was made on the anti-option bill. An amendment was agreed to fixing July 1, 1893, as the time agreed to fining July 1, 1800, as the time when the bill is to go into effect. The reso-lution offered on Saturday by Mr. Wolcots (Col.) instructing the Committee on For-eign Relations to inquire as to the expendi-tures in and about the construction of the Nicarazus Canal since the accounts of ex-penditure rendered two years since, was avread to agreed to. In the Senate the anti-option bill was de-bated Tuesday for nearly three hours and then went over without action. Sweeping denunciations of the measure were made by Senators Hear (Mass.), Vest (Mo.) and Platt (Conn.), as being in uiter contraven-tion of the constitution of the United Etates and in violation of the rights of the Etates. Mr Platt yielded to maxy inter-ruptions and was, therefore, unable to fin-ish his argument. The McGarrashan bill received its death-blow for this session in the Senate, the affirmative vote failing eight abori of the constitutional majority. The following bills were passed: For the abandonment of the Fort Bridger military reservation in Wyoming. House bill to authorize the construction of bridges across the Hiswassee, the Tennes-see, and the Clinch rivers, in the State of Tennessee. In the House, a few private measures were passed, and the Committee on Judicary baving, under a prior order, the right of way, called up some bills of secondary importance. The one of most public interest was that providing for nunsecondary importance. The one of most public interest was that providing for pun-ishment of offenses by passengers on the high seas, which was passed. On motion of Mr. Chipman (Mich.) a resolution was agreed to making provision for the joint

CHAPTER V. PRECIOUS SPOIL.

A yell of baffeled batred went up from the surging mob at the doors of the bank, as Abel Merwyn was rescued from its clutches. Then, worse babel than before ensued. The men resembled furious beasts of prey. Some one ran for the village of ficers, some one rang the town bell. Disorder stalked through every street. mob-rule held the bank invested as if the castle of a hated enemy.

Within, the relocked doors a safe barrier against the invading foe, the cashier had carried his inanimate burden to the private office, and placing him on a couch looked down at him.

"He's dead! dead!" walled Wharton, trembling like an aspen, his ashen face stricken, haunted, anguished. "Oh, what awful workers! and what awful work! A doctor, Mr. Dacre." "Silence!" ordered the cashier, sternly. "There's some liquor, in that cabinet. Quick! hand it here." He forced the fiery liquid between the lips of the prostrate man. There was a flutter of the hands. The kindly eyes opened, but dimmed and hazy, to take heir last look upon the face of the man he had trusted, whom, in his unsuspect-ing innocence, he trusted still.

"Here-here." gasped the banker, scarcely audibly, lifting an unsteady hand. "I-have-something-to-say "A false alarm," lied the sleet knave

"A faise alarm," hed the sidek knave glibly. "Some one started a run—" "Yes, yes: available funds low." gasped Merwyn. "I understand, pay them—pay—pay."

He wavered from side to side and eemed sinking again into insensibility, but the crafty, eager scoundrel pressed him close.

mean

"He's gone!" fairly shricked the old clerk, recoiling, as with a gasp the banker fell back rigid. With a serious face Arnold Dacre felt over his heart, with a blank one he arose to his feet, scared, while to the lips. "I hardly counted on this," he muttered. "That blow on his tepiple did it. Quick! Wharton-the false statement.

Hand it here. "Ob. Mr. Dacre," whimpered the clerk, but he extended a folded document. "Put it in his pocket," ordered Dacre rapidly. "Come, be brisk, it's in the second matter for you and I now. Since he's dead, we'll have to face the music. The dead, we'll fit all the blame on him." "Come, be brisk, it's no triffing "Don't! don't! I can't." chattered the wretched Wharton, cowering by the side of the couch. "You've killed himof the couch. "You've don't blast his reputation!"

Arnold Dacre's face flamed like that of a demon. "You sneak! You poltroon!" he hissed,

"If you don't instantly obey me, I'H be tray who you were, what you were when I took you in hand." "Mercy!" gasped the half insane clerk, "Pil do it. I'll do it. Oh! why did I ever come here" His trembling, unsteady hands sought to press the paper into the inside pocket of the dead man's coat. Sacrilege to the dead, his eyes were glaring with terror, he was babbling like an idiot driven frantic with fright "I can't get it in," he whined--"the pocket's full. "Empty it, then," commanded Dacre, his eyes expressing excited thought in a depths of those accusing eyes, told that man who altered the books of the bank Flora Merwyn knew all. All, at least that the villain's last words had revealed. Appearing noiselessly at the door at a critical moment, she had crossed its threshold as the care-ess self-implicating words of the cashier revealed his true iniquity as a would-be thief, and versified the dark insinuations of Ray Webster that his base hand had wrought all the trouble that was wrecking three devoted lives. She had never liked the plausible, self-assured eachder, she had treated his advances coldly, but, as the friend, the consident of her father, she had never believed him other than a man of high business integrity. Now, in the light of what the day had ushered in, and what his own bold statement had revealed, in hideous, glaring reality his evil, wicked nature stood bared of hypocritical smile and courtly completisance. Wharton had sank to a seat like a block of stone. His jaw had fallen, his eyes seamed riveted. Like the adjudged riminal at the scaffold, he only expected the next movement of the excited girl to be a call for the officers of the law-a revelation of the plots into the execution of which he had been unwillingly Gragend.

Abashed for the moment, even the bold, unscruppilous nature of Darre him-self qualled Sorrow for the lover whom she supposed dead, anxiety for the father whose form upon the couch an interven-ing table mercifully hid from her view, contempt at the duplicity of the two craven virstches before her, enobled the "Yes, yes!" he urged, "pay them! you ! natural dignity of Flora Merwyn's charauter. Like an angry queen her eyes seasned than, like an injured woman she heid them, ballied, beaten, under the domination of her flashing, accusing giance of indignation and reproach.

She drew the pocketbook from the unclosing fingers of the overwhelmed Daere. She shuddered at the contaminatng contact of his relaxing clutch, but she steeled her heart to weakness. I know your plots. I know you unmasked?" she said simply. "It is you who have brought about this trouble at the bank. Stand aside-unlock the front doors. I will tall those men the truth?

"You never shall!" Her intentions he readily divined. She would denounce him as a thief, a swindfor, as the iving hypocritical villain he truly was. She would restore coulidence. In her honored father's name: she would disbursa the ready cash contained in the

he had hoped to dazzle and win, or to her the fortune, for vindicating her frighten into becoming his wife, when dead father's tarnished reputation, the grief and despair had left her no other alternative to save a father's good name and life! That por-tion of his fabric of fraud and selfishness, the inste plotter saw crumole to mast the second sardonically as he spoke. ruins. The intended victim of his last!" He smiled sardonically as he spoke.

pion, a courageous, undaunted foe in the battle of wrong against right Compromise, there was none in that dauntiess face, crowt strangely stern and heroic. The child had become a woman-the victim an avenger.

With the quickness of lightning, the girl's heart took a vivid alarm at the harsh, blant words. Her eyes directed towards the couch, a schock that seemed to unhinge every nerve in her body con-

One wild shrick rang from her lips,

"Father - father! . my murdered

A suffocating sob checked further ut-pefore her. Flora Merwyn reeled and Arnold Dacre breathed more freely at impulse seemed to come to his

A thought of the sure pursuit that get her to a safe retreat, I can leave at my will with a clear record. No. I will make no foolish run for liberty, with a howl-will find some way to silence her lips.

Resolution in his face, Dacre ap-proached the old clerk and touched him fell an inert heap to the floor.

Wharton!"

They have killed him-vulsed her future.

"No more of that!"ordered the cashior "No more of that, ordered the cashier, sternly. "Come, man, have some gridt Never mind gaping at those two-one is beyond our help or harm, the other I'll attend to. I'll guarantee her silence, never fear. All you have to do is your part.

"What is-my part?" faltered the old clerk.

rk. . "Speedy, decisive action. I want you "Speedy, decisive action. I want you to leave here at once. You haven't the nerve to face the situation without finching, so I'll undertake that unpleas-ant task alone. Now, than, John Wias-ton, it's wealth or misery, freedom or the nerve start of the top aloct. One sanguine expectations by a curious freak of fate at the high tide moment of suc-cess and victory, discovery, disaster had suddenly crossed in a unboly schemes. sanguine expectations indemonstructions in suc-of fate, at this high ildemonstruction of suc-ress and victory, discovery, disaster had suddenly crossed is simboly schemes. For one giance at the white face of the For one giance at the white face of the bing one look into the

"Mercy" gulped the miserable man, "Mercy" gulped the miserable man, writhing in agony. "I'll obey you.

writhing in agony. Speak your orders." Dacre took up the wallet that had fallen from Flora Merwyn's handa. and a package of bank notes and some papers which he drew from his pocket, he proceeded to do up in a parcel which he tied securely.

"Take it," he commanded, pressing it upon the astonished Wharton.

"Why! you don't mean-" "That I make you temporary custodian of all this wealth, and be careful how you abide the trust. You can leave the bank safely through the house. As an underpaid clerk, the people will in underplue clerk, the population scarcely hinder or molest you. Secure the package safely about you, and go out and mix with them." "They will mob me!" chattered the further of Wisserson.

frightened Wharton.

Scarcely, in the role 1 intend you shall assume," replied Dacre, with airy confidence.

"The role?" muttered the other vaguely.

"Exactly. "You mean?"

"That of a poor, faithful servant, agonizing over the death of a beloved employer, despairing at losing a lucrative position in his old age, broken-hearted. though blameless, witless. Listen!"

He leaned close to his quivering compaulon. Into his ears he poured briefly, rapidly the details of his plan. The other listened with a curiously-working face. "You understand?" demanded the schemer, when he had concluded. "Yes," choked out Wharton, his face one void of utter wretchedness. pend on me to end the farce-what you apportion me will not be difficult for my brain is reting now!" Ho nutered a hollow laugh as he stowed the precious packet away in safety. Then, with a haunted look at the dead banker, and one of guilty horror at the inanimate Flora Merwyn, he stole from the room, muttering to himself incoherently. He had aged ten years within two hours.

Arnold Dacre stood in a thoughtful pose, once alone. He regarded Flora Merwyn thougatfully.

"She knows" he mottered, "and that knowledge is fatal to my every plan. Whatofit? Sconerorlater she must have known—she will thank me for saving her wallet she had secured. This, the weak, blind-folded being he had hoped to dazzle and win, or will not dare refuse me. I will remove her to be bouse, and await her recovery with patience. Then, to carry out the farce, the faithful, fearless bank cashier must remain at his post of duty till the uments that would be utterly ridicuious if they were not uttered in such evident good faith. But it would seem that the best and most convincing arguments that can be found is the coeducational institutions themselves. Auvone who has had any experience in such institutions must admit that such arrangement is not beneficial. sut even with the backward attitude of the eastern educational world in this matter, America, as a whole, is in advance of Europe. In pleasing con-trast to the rest of Europe's educational industries. When they were organ-ized no mention was made of sex in the admission requirements. For a long time no woman applied for admission. " hen at last they did, then, and not till then, was the question taken into consideration, and was quickly decided in favor of admitting them.

> Then he started and hurried to the door communicating with the counting room

m aroused in Much discussion has been the college world by the change of ad mission requirements recently made by quirements, eighteen of the new re-eight subjects are classed in their nature, while natural science is entirely ignored and very little Faulty ture, while natural science is entirely nored and very little English eperation is demanded. Friends the classics have long contended at sconer or later there would be a action from the violent morement ward science and away from the unics, which occurred swerel years o. But it hardly seems as if such a that a ut it bardly i return is wice. disting rangements to condunduct a go part July. There ili be f ivisions of edu be conducted by Ameri t in the branch of work at president. departme to Nebraska townto, wife of Baghes, of Teronto, wife of arbes, who delivered the le it new superio

the of the

The Trial Resumed

making the awards."

PITTSBURG, Pa., Jan. 27 .- The court room was crowded yesterday morning when the trial of Robert Beatty way resumed. Patrick Gallagher (the confessor) continued his testimony: "A1 ter leaving Homestead, I asked Beatty if the powders were still being used He said yes, that Gullfoil was using them. Guilfoil worked as a cook."

The bills of "O. K., Dempsey," were shown. Continuing Gallagher said: "Dempsey said Beatty would pay us

"Dempsey said Beatty would pay us for what we were to do, but Beatty did not do it. Beatty told me he had put seme of the powder in milk and gave it to a dog. Within a few minutes the dog was dead." On cross-examination Gallagher said the cooks in the Homestead mills were permitted to go anywhere inside the mill. Here followed a recital of the in-cidents leading up to and following the suployment of Gallagher and David-ton by Beatty and Dempsey.

Laid to Real.

FORT WAYNE, Ind., Jan. 27 .- The neral of the late Catholic bishop, ser, took place yesterday. There requiem mass at the al. The funeral was one of at demonstrations of the kind in in this city. Arch Bishop Cincinnati, officiated at the a, Binhop Radesascher, of Nash-Bintop Radesascher, of Nash-Bintop Radesascher, of Nash-Binton the femeral version. The the Como, Colo., mine were buried one grave.

meeting of the two houses of Congress on Wednesday, Feb 8, to count the electoral

The Senators gathered at the Capitol early Wednesday morning, conferred to-gether, and decided that the Senate should rether, and declade that the sense should adjourn immediately after the reading of the journal as a token of respect to the memory of ex-President Hayes. The House, as a mark of respect to the memory of the dead, also adjourned.

In the House Thursday a bill was passed to meet the requirements of the interstate commerce law relative to the testimony of witnesses. Mr. Wise (Va.) called up a Senate bill concerning testimony in crimi-nal cases growing out of the interstate commerce act with a substitute providing that no person shall be excused from attend-ing or testifying before the Interstate Commerce Commission on the ground that the testimony or evidence may tend to criminate him. The substitute was agreed to, and the bill as amended was passed without objection. Mr. Boatner (La) offered an amendment requiring all railway common carliers to accept from connecting lines loaded cars or trains to be hauled to the point of delivery at a rate not exceeding that they charge for similar service over their own lines. Agreed to 85 to 56. The bill was then passed. The bill for the establishment of a national quarantine was called up, but the opponents of the measure filbustered are instit and finally forced an discussion. In the House Thursday a bill was passed a national quarantino was called up, but the opponents of the measure filbustered against it and finally forced an adjourn-ment. The discussion of the anti-options bill was continued in the Semate from 2 o'clock until the time of adjournment, but no action was taken on the bill itself or on Mr. Georgo's amendment to it. In the morning hour Mr. Peffer (Kas) concluded his speech in favor of a single term of the Presidential office. Mr. Cullom (IIL), from the committee on commerce, reported a bill approprinting 520.00 for establish-ing buoys on the water front of Chicago. Passed.

The fonate Friday pail an additional mark of respect to the memory of sr-Pres-ident Hayes by adjourning without trans-eting any miscellateous business. The House also adjourned out of respect to the memory of ex-President Hayes. The gen-sral deficiency appropriation till was re-ported and piaced on the calendar. Mr. Warner (Dem.), of New York, from the Committee on Manufactures, presented a report on the sweating system, and it was placed upon the calendar. Mr. Dearmond (Dem.), of Masouri, from the Committee on the Election of President, etc., reported a bill to repeal the sections of the Revised Statutes concerning supervisors of elec-tions.

Telegraphic Brevities

NEARLY 300 people at Homestead are starving.

THE Minnesota Senate indorsed the anti-option bill.

NEW YORK has had 135 cases of typhus and forty deaths.

A BILL is before Congress to admis Utah to statehood

MARTLAND is experiencing the coldest

What? indeed! for the old clerk's mood had suddenly changed. He had arisen to his feet and was glaring wonderingly at a huge wallet, which he had just re-moved from Abei Merwyn's pocket. "Look!" he panted, "He meant this must have suspected or feared. See-money, bonds, deeds." John Wharton spread open the wallet. It bulged with opulence-bills of large denomination, stocks, certificates, gov-ernment bonds. Dacre, with an eager, avariclous cry, sprang to his side and gazed, too.

"What are you talking about," manded Dacre irritably. "He said save the bank-pay.

"Where did he get it?" he cried. "Enough to save the bank ten times over. Why!" as his eyes lit on the en piercing, heart-broken, agonized. Her face turned ghastly, the horrified eyes dorsement of the document, "it's Flori distended. She tottered forward with outstretched arms. Merwyn's fortune.'

"Is it?" murmured Wharton. "What of it? She would direct its use as he or father! Pay Mr. Dacre! Save the bank -protect this man's name from .infa my. terance. The wallet fell from her nerve-less fingers, and, her hands pressed to I'll tell the mob we'll open the doors, her eyes as if to shut out the gory vision we'll-

"You idiot!" cried Dacre, boiling over at the bare hint. "Do you imagine I'm a raving lunatic, with that wealth in our ower, to give it up? It's what I've lotted for, it's the reward we've schemed for. Give it here-give it up. I tell you! it's mine.

With a wail, baffied in his last hopeful struggle for stonement, the man of one bad deed and many good impulses, resled as though thrust by a tyrant's hand back into the mire of guilt and wretchedthan ever. An impuise seemed to come to his mind, as he regarded the wallet and its ness he had sought to escape. "It's mine, I tell you, all mine!" cried scattered contents, to sieze all the avail-able funds in sight and fly precipitately.

Dacre, with sparking, gloating eyes sur-veying the precious spoli he had wrested "No, it is mine."

As if dealt a sudden blow the villain ecolled, as if fascinated by a spiritual visitant the old clork reeled back. A small, graceful hand, that of an in-ruder who had just noiselessiy enterod "Only a girll" he muttered between his "Only a girll" he muttered between his teeth. "With time to cover my tracks, to the room from the covered passage way eading to the banker's home, was stretched out, and its fair white fingers stretche osed about the precious pocket-book. And, whiter than the shapely hands, face regarded the ballied, amazed ing mob after me. It would be a confes-sion of guilt. I will face the music. I plotter with a glance of pringled indig-uation, anguish, and resolve.

cowered as before a stern tribunal. Like an accusing angel sommoning him to the bar of judgment, there stood be-fore him the fair, bereaved creature he had so uruelly wronged-Flora Merwyn, the banker's daughter.

CHAPTER VI.

TER CRITICAL MORENT.

Arnold Dacre feit the wallet and its precious contents slip from his nervoless hands, and he powerless to combat a grasp far weaker than his own. Master of the situation complete a reo-ment previous, enriched beyond his meet

She knows!" "If you'd only pay the depositors," began Wharson, gaspingly, woman--the victim an avenger. "Do not touch me-stand back, mon-ster! thief!" cried Flora, with glowing eves, as Darre made a movement as if to scize her forcibly. "When my father returns..." returnscovert look without.

On the steps stood the Sheriff of the The schemer started. In a flash the truth dawned upon him. Flora Merwyn did not know of the arrival of the county, a legal-looking document in his hands. nanker. of the last tragic episode of the

"I order you to disperse," he was say ing to the crowd. "The court has au hour. She had, it seemed, arrived upon the scene only in time to catch Dacre's thorized me to take formal possession words relating to the wallet. He stepped of the bank until the bank examiner ar thorized me to take formal possession aside, he pointed to the couch. "Your father," he said, "lies there. Violence can do you no good.

rives. Violence can do yo "He is coming in here!" "He is coming in here!" muttered Da-cre concernedly. "She is here. Should she revive before I have time to show my power over her father she will reveal all. I must convey her to the housekeeper's care. Then to meet the Sheriff with a bold face "

Dacre returned to the private office. About to lift the senseless Flora in his arms, he paused with a shock.

"Mercy!" he ejaculated in a lost tone." Some one is coming from the house." Yes, the volces of two men reached his ears. Their conversation told that they were the Sheriff's subordinates, bent on reaching the entrenched enemy from the rear.

Arnold Dacre had but a moment to act. He knew that once formal posses-sion was given the Sheriff, the latter would depart, leaving a single officer on guard.

the complication that had diverted the Time was everything, to silence Flore Merwyn meant his salvation. He glanced wildly about him. Then lifting the attention of Flora from her announced purpose of unmasking his villainy. As he gazed alternately from father to daughter, however, with bent brows, his senscless girl, he bore her straight to the open vault. face took a deeper, more serious frown

Placing her on the cold stone floor, he drew the heavy iron door nearly shut. He gained the center of the room again just as the two officers appeared. "Here are the keys to the front doors."

he said simply. "You can admit the Sherif would follow, however, a longing glance at the beautiful face of Flora Merwyn, The latter entered the private office a minute later. checked the impulse. Then his wonted boldness returned to him, bringing the color back into his face, and assurance

"This is bad work, Mr. Dacre," he said. "It is is one work, Mr. Paces," he said, with a concerned giance at the banker. "It is no fault of mise." returned Dacre glibly. "I have been hoping you would come. I dared not surrender to that howling, informated mob."

"No, you have acted with courage and discretion," assented the officer. "I must take formal charge here."

"I have some private papers I wish to look over in the counting-room-" be-ran Dacre, planning an opportunity to get Flora unseen to the house "Certainly. I will only station a man at the outside entrance that is all ex-cept to put what assets the safes may contain in practical possession of the court." proached the old clerk and touched him sharpiy on the shotlder. John Wharton looked up, a vacant, dazed look in his eyes. For a min-nice or two, as he passed his trembling hands aimlessly over his face, he resem-bled a person just recovering from a shock of terror that had well-nigh un-ble the mental face the ourt" And, as he spoke, the Sheriff advanced lowards the vault in which lay the inensible Flors.

A cold horror wrenched the heart the plotter as the officer extended his balanced the mental faculta. "Come! rome yourself and don't set there like a block of stons," spoke Dacre irritably. "You see what has occurred. It was to push the massive fron shut, turn the knob, and click the com-bination, closing in the persecuted, im-periled Flors Merwyn to a living tomb. [TO BE CONTINUED.]