THURSDAY, APRIL 3, 1894.

President Cleveland has at last taken up the Harrison policy relative to Hawaii and will establish a protectorate over that republic.

The working of the new law in South Carolina on the whisky question is not proving very satisfactory. A war of good sized proportions is growing out of it and a number of lives have already been taken.

In his veto message of the Bland bill President Cleveland makes strong plea to congress for more power to be given to the secretary of the treasury to issue bonds. If the signs of the times indicate anything they certainly show that public sentiment is opposed to bonds and it is hardly likely that congress will adopt the policy mapped out by the chief executive.

Matt Daugherty, of Keith county and chairman of the republican congressional committee, is considered by many as a possible candidate for congress from this district. Matt is well qualified for the place; his republicanism of the proper stripe and he would prove a hard working champion of the people's interests. However, we have not learned as to whether Mr. Daugherty would consent to be a candidate.—North Platte Tribune.

A good while ago Governor Crouse gave it out that he would not be a candidate for a second term and aspirants for the place began to get their lightning rods up in hope of being the lucky man. Of late vague rumors have been afloat to the effect that he had changed his mind and would seek a renomination at the hands of his party. This made it unpleasant for those who were seeking the place and also for many of the friends of Governor Crouse who had taken him at his word and taken positions from which they could not very easily recede. In a letter of recent date, addressed to Lieutenant Governor Majors, the Governor states that he is not a candidate for a second term so the lightning rods have again gone up. The republicans of the western part of the state should get together and see that the man who gets their support is sound on the subject of irrigation.

The creamery matter does not progress as fast as it was expected to. The business men of the town took all the stock they were able to and there the thing rests. The farmers seem to be unwilling or unable to take any stock. This is an important matter and should not be allowed to drop. This locality has got past the ranch system of stock growing and has not so far proven reliable as an exclusive farming country and some way must be found to make a living for the land owners. There is too much dead land for this county ever to return to the use of early days so there is no use figuring on that. There is no question that small bunches of cattle will be profitable, but it takes more than the average settler has or can handle to afford a living simply from the increase. It would seem that the encouragement of the dairy industry is the most feasible way to solve the problem. There is plenty of capital in the county if it can only be interested in the enterprise and it is a matter of financial importance to those who have means to help put the settlers in a way to make a comfortable living and at the same time pay a reasonable interest on the money invested. A move to make the residents of the county permanent will be much better than to have a floating population. A united effort should be made to raise the amount necessary to establish the creamery.

The talk about the nine counties which compose the pan-handle being cut off from Nebraska and annexed to the state of Wyoming has attracted a good deal of attention by the people who are interested in the future of Nebraska. It has shown that there is a feeling in the western part of the state that justice has not been done to this portion of the state. The schools, asylums, institutes, experimental stations and all other things have been paroled out to the eastern part of the state and the west has received nothing. Of course the people of this part of the state have not always had men to represent them who could accomplish much and who were not tied to the apron strings of some female lobbyist, and hence the people have themselves to blame to some extent, and it is but natural that each locality should look after its own interests. The expressed desire of some of the residents of the pan-handle to secede and be made a part of another state has caused the business men of the cities to realize that they have a duty to perform toward the western part of Nebraska from a purely business standpoint, if nothing more. The business interests demand that the west be developed.

west be developed. This means added business to all lines and the further demand is made by the overcropped condition of the labor market in the east, in both the skilled and unskilled classes. The encouragement of irrigation and the establishment of experimental stations, as well as the direction of new settlers to the western part of Nebraska, will be taken hold of by an element in the cities of the state which has so far been indifferent to the work and when the next session of the legislature convenes if the west is represented properly and fair and reasonable measures asked for, the great commercial interests of the cities will give a helping hand and carry the measure to success. Let the west ask for all it is entitled to, but let care be exercised that the bounds of reason be not overstepped.

The attention of our readers is called to the record of the proceedings of the county commissioners which appears in another column of this issue in regard to the sheriff and treasurer. THE JOURNAL defers comment until next week in order to look up some matters bearing on the subject.

An Old Newspaper Law.

Dorchester Star. We frequently receive communications for publication containing matter that the writer is ashamed to sign his name to. In this day and age it seems that every one able to comprehend the least should readily understand that some one must be responsible for its authorship. In writing anything for publication if you do not desire to let yourself be known to the editor, do not kick because your articles are not published. Everything not signed either by real name or non de plume the name of the man at the head of the paper is responsible for. This invariable rule was adopted by Gutenberg, and by him received from Noah.

A Plea for the Girls.

Parents, give your daughters a trade or profession. Yes, my dear, horrid-looking madam, and you, too, my dear sir, raising your eyebrows in polite condemnation at sight of the homely word I repeat it most emphatically, give them a trade. No matter what it is, so long as it will earn a good, honest living for them in case they should ever need it, and even if they should not need it, the feeling of comfort and independence that comes with it is very satisfactory, and not to be attained in any other way whatever. "But," I hear you say, "what does my daughter of a trade? Has she not everything that she can possibly wish for? And, besides that, all girls marry; she will probably be no exception to the rule. What need therefore, that she should trouble herself as to ways and means?"

Now such logic is all well enough for some, and no doubt many are content to let it go at that; but the average girl's pride rebels at the idea of being dependent. Then, too, suppose your riches should take wing, as riches have a disagreeable habit of doing occasionally; would not the knowledge that your daughter held in her fair hands a shield and sword with which to protect herself and keep the grim foes Want Distress at a distance prove a comfort and blessing, not only to her, but to yourself as well? It is true that all—or nearly all—girls marry; and let me tell you right here, that then is the time, of all others, when a girl longs for a few dollars of her very own, that she may add a few straws to the home nest that is to be hers, and feel free to exercise her own judgment and taste in so doing. No one except those who have experienced it know what a humiliating feeling possesses one who has to stand idle while her belongings are bought for her with money that somebody else has earned and owned.—From "Give the Girls a Chance," Demorest's Magazine for April.
