large crop of candidates is springing irp. Whitehead's name is being menioned frequently as a good one with which to head the state ticket. He has many friends all over the state and it may be that they will not allow him to retire to private life. The state needs the services of good men and Whitehead is one of that kind. Tom Majors and Jack McColl seem to be the others who are in the lead for the place at the head of the state ticket, but the race is young yet and no one can now predict what the outcome will be. If the republican party wishes to regain what it has lost in the state and district it must see to it that none but good men are named as leaders. One unwise selection would jeopardize the entire ticket.
