In 1853 out of every 1,000 marriages in England and Wales, fifty-one were performed by Roman Catholic priests.

Bishop Tutwell of the Church of England is about to go as a missionary to Hausaland, Africa, a country of 15,000,000 inhabitants that has never been effectually touched by English missionaries.

The decision of the archbishops of England in requesting compliance with their decision in the ritualistic cases has induced nearly all the vicars—some 300 in number—to yield obedience.

The young men of Dr. Meredith's church in Brooklyn have decided to meet just before Sunday evening services and discuss the morning sermon.

Rev. Dr. Edward McGlynn is lying in a state of great weakness at Newburg, having been prostrated by two alarming attacks of heart failure within twenty-four hours.

The Baptists of Brooklyn are going to build a $150,000 church, which will have a roof garden where services may be held during the summer evenings.

Two trolley car motormen of Boston have been suspended from the congregation of the Broadway tabernacle church of that city for running their cars on Sunday.

The late Erasmus Lathrop of Westfield, Mass., left his entire estate, amounting to about $12,000, to Dwight I. Moody of Northfield.

France is said to be the most important as well as the most promising Protestant mission field.

Some time ago it was announced the star was to allow missionaries to settle in Khartoum in September.

The old house was bought back and refurbished, and Johnnie and his aunt soon settled into the old life.

Johnnie really couldn't say the house was hardly dared think them as yet; but he crossed the room to Aunt Bess and whispered in her ear.

"Oh, John!" she cried delightedly, "how stupid of me! It's just the thing! And I never thought of it before!"

"Miss Elizabeth was in a flutter of excitement. She urged her nephew to go at once on his errand.

"I'll sit up till you come home. Won't it be like a story if Bessie becomes your wife?"

"Perhaps she won't have me, Aunt Bessie!"

"Bessie! Go along! What's worth having is worth asking for. Have you? Of course she will! She's sensible, Bessie is."

And Miss Elizabeth looked with pride on the stalwart young man who, although he was not handsome, had his grandfathers' face and the woman could trust.

Aunt Bessie was right. And now the two families are one, and the old maids vie with each other in petting and spoiling their grown-up children.

LAUGHING MATTERS. Detroit Journal: "Are you familiar with the music?" "Tolerably. I know enough of the places where a person should stop breathing."

Indianapolis Journal: "They say music will cure the blues." "That's so; when I hear some kinds of music I quit feeling sad and get mad."

Chicago Record: "Julia, you ought to see the doctor about that cough." "So near Christmas as this? No, indeed!"

Chicago Times-Herald: "The man who expects to get something for nothing, doesn't—if he wants to sit around unoccupied while the fellow with a press agent is getting there."

Cleveland Plain Dealer: "Some philosopher says that real worth requires no interpreter." "Well, that's right; if doesn't—if it wants to sit around unoccupied while the fellow with a press agent is getting there."

Judge: "Isn't it odd that whenever Mr. Dinsmore makes a present it always consists of gloves?" said Miss Goldthorpe. "He wants his presents to be always on hand," replied Miss Wilberforce.

Indianapolis Journal: "I can't understand why women enjoy seeing football." "I'll tell you; it is because they the men look as if they had been cleaning house."

Indianapolis News: In Loganap there seems to be a rivalry among the preachers to attract large congregations, and it is said that they have adopted means to this end, among them the selection of a series of "catching" topics. In this way one clergyman has announced a sermon "for men only." He will utter a tract, a service "for women only."

The obvious resemblance of this kind of notice to things of less sweetness and light need only be alluded to. With full credit for the purity of purpose that animates the preachers in using this kind of announcement as a chattering social attraction, we cannot help but feel that there is something of the kind of seal in it that eats one up. We can hardly imagine the Master doing so.

Miss Eliz'beth.

"So Miss Pysers' got to go to the poor farm, and let that furniture be taken, and let this man get it, I'm surprised that she's kept out of it so long."

"Yes," said the portly, pompous Mrs. Barker, wife of the chairman of the selectmen, "my husband told me this noon that she had applied to the town for help, and of course they can't support her in her own house."

"I said 'twas flying in the face of fate when she took those two children to bring up; one died and t'other ran away, and now she's all alone."

The vinegar-faced dame who had thus delivered herself settled to her work with a self-congratulatory look, as if she thanked the Lord that she was not as others were.

Mrs. Barker crossed her hands in stately idleness; it did not become the wife of the richest man in Bayville to give her the fortnight circle; her presence was all-sufficient.

Miss Berry, who sat beside her, looking up from her seam. Her sallow face was a trifle pale.

"You don't mean to say that the Willowdale people are going to allow Elizabeth Pysers to go on the town after all the good she's done?" she asked.

"Why not?" returned Mrs. Barker. "It ain't their fault that she's wasted her money. She's shiftness always givin' something to somebody, and meek-meek as Moses; you'd think she shouldn't say her soul's her own; but she's deep!"

And with a sigh of commiseration at the unworthiness of poor little Miss Pysers, she closed her mouth with a snap. She had never given her for being Mr. Barker's first love, and she half suspected that he would be quite willing to exchange his energetic and short-tempered wife for the sweetheart of his youth.

"But you mustn't whisper that I told you this, for Mr. Barker says women never know enough to keep anything to themselves."

"I'm sure we never gossip here," said Mrs. Green.

"Where are you going, Miss Pysers? Ain't you going to stop to tea?"

"No, I'm going to the poorhouse! I was there one in this God-forsaken hole to pay her back a little of the kindness she had always shown others."

"Now, I'll bet Clarindy Berry's gone straight over to the millinery store to spread the news; so afraid she won't be the first to tell it. Thank heaven, I know enough to keep things to myself."

But Miss Berry was not going to the store nor to spread the news; she knew that it was unprecedented for her to leave the sewing meeting before tea time; but as she listened to the talk the days of her girlhood rose before her when she and Elizabeth Pysers were "chums," and told each other all their secrets; then came a foolish little quarrel, and they had not exchanged words for twenty years.

She walked straight down the street, talking the days of her girlhood rose before her when she and Elizabeth Pysers were "chums," and told each other all their secrets; then came a foolish little quarrel, and they had not exchanged words for twenty years.

She paused, out of breath with excitement and remained for some time in deep thought. Bessie, too, was silent. She divined what was passing in her aunt's mind.

"Say, Bessie," said Miss Berry at last, "do you think we could contrive to keep another? I can't bear the thought of having Elizabeth go to the poor farm. There's that back chamber with nothing in it, and she's got her own furniture."

She looked appealingly at the girl, who did not immediately answer. To undertake the care of the meagre and meagre sacrifices, more rigid economy. She sighed a little; life was hard enough for her already. Should she add to her burden? Would she be just to herself in doing so? Then she thought of the days when she and John Pysers were boys and girls lovers, and made wonderful plans of what they would do when they grew up. She had never lost faith in John; some day if he lived, she knew he would come back to them. A light sprang into her pretty blue eyes, and she met her aunt's look with a smile.

"Miss Elizabeth mustn't go on the town, auntie. There's plenty of room for her here, and we'll drive over this very evening and bring her home."

After her kuest had departed, Miss Elizabeth sank to the old lounge that had witnessed so many confidences, and the tears flowed down her thin cheeks. She thought she had hardened herself for what the morrow would bring; but now she was a forsaken old maid, crying because she must become the companion of Crazy Jane and Wiltess Will. How little she had dreamed of this the days when she was young and pretty, and every one called her Bess.

One there was who swore she was the apple of his eye; but he would not undertake the care of her orphaned nephew and niece, and she would not desert them; so he left her for another. Now he was an important person in the town, a selectman; and she gave a little gasp, and hoped he would not be the one chosen to come for her tomorrow; she really didn't think she could bear that.

This was the last night in her own home, and she could not get her thin mind to rest; that formed her evening's rest; something would rise in her throat and choke her every time she tried.

Mark! a wagon was rumbling up to the gate; could it be that the last night in her own home was to be denied her? A loud knock brought her trembling to the door. A burly teamster stood there, and by his side Miss Berry and Bessie; what could it mean?

"Betty, you are coming home with Bessie and me. Tell us what furniture you take, and let this man get it," said Miss Berry; and she drew the dumb-wounded woman aside and in a few words explained matters.

Almost dozed, Miss Elizabeth sank on the old lounge, while Miss Berry swept from room to room selecting the articles to be taken. Then Bessie brought the bonnet and shawl that lay ready for tomorrow's journey, and together she and Miss Berry led her to her new home.

Could it be possible that the poorhouse was a thing of the past? She must be dreaming. By tomorrow, sure, she would wake up to the awful reality.

But it was no dream, and the next morning Miss Elizabeth awoke with the feeling that an awful catastrophe had been averted and the sword which had been hanging over her head for so long had been prevented from falling by the kind intervention of her old-time friend.

As Bessie had anticipated, the coming of another into the little home circle meant more self-denial for herself. New frocks and hats were out of the question; but she ripped and sponged and remade her winter dress, and her nimble fingers and good taste soon brought out of the ruins of last season's wardrobe a brand new outfit in which she looked as pretty as a pink.

As for the two old friends, they fairly worshipped the girl who was the joy as well as the sunlight of their home. So this happy family dwelt together in peace and harmony, independent of outsiders, until an event happened which broke up the home circle.

"Well, there, I'll leave it so. I look pretty well I think. Yes, and after I took the looking-glass into the water, and if I would use it for plate and all that. But what did I care? I knew if I didn't take 'em I wouldn't have any."

"Bill, did you find out who that stranger was that stopped here last night after a busy life, and taking comfort of the shelter, after his years of hand-in-glove intimacy with the weather. When he went to walk along the quiet boulevards at night it seemed to him he could hear Dunston's hoofs upon the paving, and in his dreams he was the happiest when seemed to be astride that familiar back.
