The Harrison Sun, No. 1. Vol. 1, edited by Col. Ketchum, of Crawford, lightened up the local ferment for the first time, on Saturday, May 12, 1900. The PRESS-JOURNAL is in receipt of a copy, and its local editor, L. C. Wright requested us to exchange, which we cheerfully do. We are wondering if the citizens of Harrison and Sioux County propose to patronize a local paper in the interest of Crawford, and a citizen of Crawford, or in other words an outside corporation, and besides a paper that is here only temporary, as has been intimated to us by some of our republican brothers.

On last Friday the O. W. ranch owned by Mrs. Henry, aunt of Mr. W. H. Bonnell and at that time occupied by the family was totally destroyed by fire. The ladies with the two children were alone at the time, and Mrs. Bonnell was upstairs busy and on descending to the lower floor she was horrified to find it all ablaze. It is supposed the little boy had been playing with matches and in that way started the fire. The loss will reach into the thousands. On hearing of the catastrophe, Mr. & Mrs. Henry started at once for the scene of the fire, to do what they could for their children.

Ketchum was up from Crawford Friday looking after his son.

Our "Boggie" items did not arrive in time for publication by two days.

Ed. Lyons, has leased H. A. Priddy's blacksmith shop and will run it for a while, and should it prove to be anything like profitable, we learn, will buy Homer out and become sole owner and proprietor. Ed is a hustler and we believe he will make it a profitable business to engage in.

Ordinarily ye scribe is not in favor of the question box; but just recently during one of our reveries the idea occurred to us why not ask a question and republishing immediately to the impulse we ask the following, and the person who sends us the first correct answer is to receive the PRESS-JOURNAL gratis one year:

Their Tenth Anniversary.

On last Wednesday occurred the tenth anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. John E. Marsteller, and their many friends took cognizance of the fact, by repairing en masse to their palatial residence on the east side, and bared "the lion in his den" this time however the lion had lain down in his lair, as John was in the tender embrace of morpheus when his unbidden guests arrived. But slumber for the evening was banished, and mirth and merriment prevailed. First in order was the renewal of their marriage vows by the host and hostess. Next in order came "charades" with J. H. Bartell and W. H. Davis as leaders, D. H. Griswold played the part of the "copper" perfectly and Mr. Avery seemed equally familiar with his exclamation of "gee" next came refreshments to which the guests did ample justice, after which vocal and instrumental music was indulged in, until the wee small hours of the morning, then mid the tooting of tin horns and clash of tin ware which was presented to Mr. and Mrs. Marsteller the invaders departed but promised the host and hostess that they would return to help celebrate their fiftieth.
