A Stadium designed for comfort, to protect the shoes of the athletic fan, and to allow a full view of the entire playing field and running track no matter in what part of the stand a spectator may be seated—that's the New Nebraska Memorial Stadium. Six months ago when the plans for the new Stadium were first being definitely drawn up, the Stadium building committee remembered the little things. It remembered the many times excited fans stamp their feet, it remembered the discomfort of sitting with feet hanging straight down and in accordance with these remembrances it planned the Nebraska Stadium. The seats in Nebraska's new Stadium are a definite improvement on those in almost any other Stadium in the country. They will consist of three planks, each four inches wide, placed upon wooden blocks, which protrude over the edge of the concrete step so as to allow the spectators to throw their feet slightly backward rather than being forced to sit in a straight stiff fashion. It also protects the back of the shoes from rubbing against the concrete seats. No matter in what part of the Stadium a spectator may be seated he will be able to see all of the playing field, every corner of the running track. The stands have been so "dished" that every one of the more than 30,000 seats in the new athletic structure will afford a clear complete view of the field. START WORK ON BALCONY Work on the last of the five sections on the west stands has been started now, and the contractors are starting preliminary work on the balcony. The east stands are about one-half completed, and work on the last three stands is fast progressing, the center two being all poured with concrete. In spite of the fact that the steam shovel working on the Stadium grounds each day removes more than 700 cubic yards of dirt, and has been removing that amount every day for more than two months, there is still a good slice of mother earth to be removed. The playing fields of the new structure will be eight feet below the surface of the old field and 66,000 cubic yards of dirt must be removed from the site to allow of this level. Ten thousand cubic feet of concrete will have been poured in to the new Stadium when the 1923 football season opens. This amount does not include the concrete which will be used in the colonades which enclose the ends, six thousand cubic yards of concrete being needed for the oval ends and the four towers. Two hundred cubic yards of concrete are poured daily, when the concrete mixers work. The work of preparing the various forms is, however, far slower than the work of pouring the concrete, so that concrete is not poured on every day. FIGURES ON MATERIAL One hundred twenty-eight thousand gallons of water, six hundred cars of sand, each car containing 120,000 pounds, 350,000 feet of lumber, 15,000 barrels of concrete, will be used in the new Stadium. Fifty-one rows lead from the bottom of the stands to the top of the sections, an additional sixteen being included in the balcony, making sixty-seven rows in all. The weekly payroll of the Parsons Construction Co., the general contractors in charge of the Stadium, is $5,500. Dedication of the Nebraska Memorial Stadium will be held October 20, homecoming day for Nebraska alumni, when the Cornhuskers clash with the Jayhawkers from Kansas in the annual contest between the two universities. Last year when Kansas dedicated its Stadium, Nebraska was the guest of honor, and, incidentally, won the game 28 to 0. In return for the honor conferred on the Cornhuskers, and to be assured of a good football game for the dedication, the Nebraska football management had arranged for Kansas to help in the dedication of the Husker's new athletic field. Among the laborers on the force of the Stadium contractors are many candidates for the 1923 football team, gridsters who have selected the Stadium as a fitting place in which to harden up their muscles for the big battle for a place on the 1923 Cornhusker eleven.
