the cattle when the boy espied a wallop the life out of the reptile, after which, believing it to be dead, he and Mrs. Rubottom went to take the rattles off, when it made a lunge and plunged its fangs into the unfortunate woman's thumb. Quick as she could, she bound her wrist tightly with strips of cloth to prevent the poisoned blood from circulating and sent for the found the hand badly swollen, and yet he tells us that he ex-
