

TO REMOVE DANDRUFF

Get a 2-cent bottle of Dandruff at any drug store, pour a little into your hand and rub well into the scalp with the finger tips. By morning most, if not all, of this awful scurf will have disappeared. Two or three applications will destroy every bit of dandruff; stop scalp itching and falling hair.—Advertisement.

Cross, Feverish Child is Billious or Constipated

Look, Mother! See if tongue is coated, breath hot or stomach sour.

'California Syrup of Figs' can't harm tender stomach, liver, bowels.

Every mother realizes, after giving her children 'California Syrup of Figs,' that this is their ideal laxative, because they love its pleasant taste and it thoroughly cleanses the tender little stomach, liver and bowels without griping.

When cross, irritable, feverish or breath is bad, stomach sour, look at the tongue, mother! If coated, give a teaspoonful of the harmless 'fruit laxative,' and in few hours all the foal, constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again.

Millions of mothers keep 'California Syrup of Figs' handy; they know a teaspoonful today saves a sick child tomorrow. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of 'California Syrup of Figs,' which has directions for babies, children of all ages and grown-ups printed on the bottle.

MANY NEW COMERS FOR MARKET WEEK

Hundreds of Retailers Make First Buying Trip to Omaha for Merchants' Market Week.

Agreeable surprises met hundreds of retail merchants from all over a dozen states who are in Omaha this week attending one of Omaha Merchants' Market weeks for the first time in their lives.

There are hundreds of them who have attended every Merchants' Market week since this institution was founded a little over two years ago, but there are other hundreds who are here for the first time.

The surprise they met lies in the fact that they have just learned how complete are the facilities of the Omaha market for supplying their every want.

Dozen States Represented. No less than a dozen states are represented in the crowds of merchants that are here buying now. An exceptionally large percentage of the visiting retailers this year are from Iowa, which is looked upon by the local market as increasing evidence of the favor in which the Omaha market is held by those who are so situated that they have to some extent in the past been running into Chicago more readily than into Omaha.

The Strange Case of Mary Page. By Frederick Lewis, Author of 'What Happened to Mary' Pictures by Essanay

SYNOPSIS. Mary Page, actress, is accused of the murder of David Pollock and is defended by her lover, Phillip Langdon. Pollock with it previously, and Mary's trial she admits she had the revolver. Her maid testifies that Mary threatened Pollock with it previously, and Mary's leading man implicates Langdon. How Mary disappeared from the scene of the crime is a mystery. Brandon tells of a strange hand-print he saw on Mary's shoulder. Further evidence shows that Pollock was drunk prior to the murder, and that Mary was sane in the eyes of the jury. The defense is 'repressed psychosis.' Witnesses described Mary's flight from her intoxicated father and her father's suicide. Nurse Waiton describes the kidnapping of Mary by Pollock.

CHAPTER VII—Continued. 'I had an appointment with the old man, but he was scrapping with one of his romantic leads—you could hear them clear out to the front hall—and it was a long time before I could persuade his little cerebrum to go in and tell him I was waiting. At any rate, he came out at last blowing blasts of red fire after the actor—and then he saw Mary. Talk about lions and lambs! Why, he purred when he saw her, and he was so sweet to me I almost got a leading woman's contract out of him before he waked up and began to ask me questions about Mary. Something in the way he looked when I said she was out of a job, made me wish I was a full sized chaperon, but when he said to 'send her in to talk to him, he might be able to place us both.' I didn't dare turn down the chance of a double meal ticket, so I went out and Mary went in.

'Was there any one in the office at the time?' 'No, the office boy beat it as soon as the actor had gone, and the 'stenog' had already deserted the keys, so we had the suite to ourselves. That was what made me leary. At any rate, when Mary was in the private office, she spoke up and played the keyhole game to a finish. It was a Yale lock, so I couldn't get an eye-ful, but I've been there myself too often not to know the sort of a note that a manager gets into his voice when he's putting on the soft pedal and telling you that you're a heavy and all star next season, if you'll only be nice to him. I could hear him getting confidential, too, and Mary's voice sounded so frightened I took my longest and best hat pin, and began to turn the knob a little at a time to see if the door was locked. It wasn't, thank goodness, and when I heard Mary shriek and say, 'Let me go! I shouted, 'Barton to the rescue!' or I would have if I hadn't been too mad to shout anything, and double quickened into the room in time to see Webster holding Mary in his arms and telling her that pretty girls were made to be kissed, and that that far I had an inch or so of my hat pin in his arm just above the elbow, and what he said then wouldn't be polite to repeat. At any rate, Mary and I beat it while the going was good, and Mary was so upset we decided to go right home instead of calling on any of the other managers. That was how we happened to run into Dave Pollock.

'Where did you meet Mr. Pollock?' 'Oh, he was on the job at the apartment when we got home. Playing the humble but persistent swain—Wanted to lay his fortune at her feet and ally her to a life of glided ease. He pleaded all that sort of soft-music stuff, and told her she didn't realize how cruel the world was to a girl (men always say that) and how she would suffer to see her mother growing old and lacking the comforts she could not earn for her. Then he pulls out his wallet and taps it, saying, 'All that I have is yours, Mary, even if you don't marry me.' Business of soft music! 'Were you in the room while this was going on?' 'No,' she answered, winning a gasp of laughter from the court room, 'but you can't brush your teeth in a New York apartment without the people to the next door flat hearing you, and everything that Mary said or Dave Pollock said might as well have been shouted through a megaphone.'

'Did Miss Page seem touched by Mr. Pollock's offer?' said Langdon, repressing a smile with difficulty. 'No, she stood up to him spunkily and told him flat where he got off. 'I'm going to get work,' she said, 'but even if I didn't my mother and I would never accept any help from you. I have only one thing to ask, and that is that you leave here at once and do not come again.' I can't promise not to see you, Mary,' he said; 'I must and will.' 'Well, at least I won't speak to you,' she said defiantly; and with that he swung about and came out in the hall where I had the door all nicely opened for him. I told him sweetly that I'd opened it for him to get out, but I'd be shot before I ever opened it to him in again. He glared at me but he didn't say anything, and as soon as he was out of sight I ran back to the sitting room, to find Mary in a dead faint. It was such a long time before she came round, and then she was so dazed and terrified that we were all scared to death, and I swore a solemn vow then and there that I'd be the busiest little stage mother and chaperon and advice giver to Mary that any girl ever had.'

Her voice, which in spite of the careless slang, had a vibrant sweetness that carried conviction, suddenly trembled, and the quick tears filled her eyes as, turning to Mary, she cried eagerly: 'And, Mary, I've kept my word, haven't I? Haven't I?' Mary nodded, smiling through her own tears, and the spectators who throughout the breezy testimony of the young actress had been in gases of laughter, suddenly sobered. They saw the brave girl heart under the butterfly exterior, and realized the wisdom and the goodness behind the vulgar words.

But Langdon, seeing the judge frown at this shattering of legal precedent, asked his next question quickly: 'You and Miss Page did secure positions in the same company, did you not?' 'Oh, yes, in 'The Blue Feather.' You see, I'd made up my mind that it was both of us or none, but we didn't have any trouble, because while I'd had the experience Mary had the looks, so we were booked up for rehearsals in a week or so. Mary took to it like a duck to water and made a hit with the stage manager before he'd got through calling the rest of us all the names of his vocabulary. So when it came to one bit where the fat tenor had to choose a little fool for the chorus to sing an encore with him Mary got the chance, and made good, too. But that was afterwards.'

'Well, suppose you tell us what occurred on the day 'The Blue Feather' opened.' 'Oh, the day was the same as my other opening day. We'd rehearsed half the night and started in at 8:30 in the morning. Somebody had sent a set of managers that was backwards and the leads had to learn their business all over again, and the hats for the chorus turned up the wrong color. The stage manager had a grouch and the orchestra got all mixed up on the encores, and we were dead. It was always like that a few hours before the overture on an opening night, so Mary and I were mighty glad to slip out home and rest an hour before going back to make up. We didn't dare stay long, though, for being late is the worst sin in the book at a show-ship, so it was round about 7 when we got on our lids and were ready to beat it back. Just when we were leaving, though, mother came running in and said, 'Oh, Mary, Phillip Langdon is here and he wants to see you just a minute before you leave.' At that Mary lights all the lamps in her eyes, and went into the sitting room with me a close second.

Have Dark Hair and Look Young

Don't stay gray! Nobody can tell when you darken gray, faded hair with Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and attractive with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for 'Weyth's Sage and Sulphur Compound,' you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, all ready to use, for about 50 cents. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says, everybody uses Weyth's Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and beautiful. This preparation is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.—Advertisement.
