SIX SOLDIERS ARE KILLED BY BANDITS

Colonel Slocum Reports Mexicans Who Attacked Camp at Columbus Retreating Southeast.

CAVALRY IS SENT IN PURSUIT

EL PASO, Tex., March 9.—Six American soldiers were killed this morning early at Columbus, N. M., in a battle with Mexican bandits...

WATCHFUL WAITING SEEMS NEAR THE END

(Continued from Page One.) Business would be the signal for another outbreak in the senate, where the opponents of the administration's policy have been most active.

Baker Takes Charge. After the president and Mr. Baker had discussed the reports the president decided that the new secretary of war should take office at once.

Secretary Baker transmitted to President Wilson reports about the attack on Columbus, N. M., as quickly as they were received at the War Department.

Questions About Authority. There is conflict of opinion regarding the authority of the War Department to send troops into a foreign country without the consent of congress.

There is conflict of opinion regarding the authority of the War Department to send troops into a foreign country without the consent of congress.

Major General Funston is in supreme command of the situation on the border and has full authority to do everything short of sending troops over the line without communication with Washington.

Senator Fall of New Mexico, republican, and one of the foremost opponents of the president's Mexican policy, sent telegrams to railroad officials and citizens in the vicinity of Columbus asking for details.

Missouri Again Rising at Yankton

YANKTON, S. D., March 9.—(Special Telegram.)—The Missouri river, which fell eighteen inches last night, is again rising and is now higher than ever.

John Adkins and hired man are on Ambrose Island and cannot be reached.

Chicago Saloon Closes for Lent

CHICAGO, March 9.—Announcement that a saloon-cave of which he is the proprietor will be closed during Lent was made here today by Robert E. O'Callaghan.

When you have a severe headache, accompanied by a coated tongue, loathing of food, constipation, torpid liver, vomiting of partly digested food and l-on bile, you may know that you have a severe bilious attack.

VILLA TROOPERS BURN COLUMBUS, N. M., AND SHOOT MANY AMERICANS

drove the raiders across the border. Nine civilians and six United States troopers were known dead early in the day.

Villa and Lopez in Command. Information that Francisco Villa and his chief lieutenant, Pablo Lopez, were in personal command of the raid was given Colonel Slocum by a Mexican rancher, captured by the bandits last Sunday, and who escaped during the fighting.

The Mexican told of the hanging of the American ranchers, McKinney, Corbett and O'Neill. He added that a fourth American, whose name he did not know, had been hanged at the same time.

The Mexican told Slocum that Villa left the Bosques Grandes ranch Tuesday, made a leisurely journey north and about 4 yesterday afternoon left a point on the Boca Grande and started for the border.

Traveling north they crossed the boundary west of Columbus, said the Mexican, "and entered town by a ditch running past the cavalry camp. Villa was in personal charge and declared he was going to kill every American because the American government did not treat him right.

Villa declared Carranza could not make peace in Mexico. With Villa were Pablo Lopez, Martin Lopez, Colonel Candelario Sevantes, Colonel Cruz Chavez, General Jose Fernandez and General Beltran.

To Force Intervention. The Mexican, who prayed that his name be not used, confirmed a report previously given out by Carranza officials that before leaving the Santa Ana district in western Chihuahua, Villa had freely stated that he intended to force intervention by the United States by raiding American territory and killing everybody in sight.

Lieutenant Clyde Ely with twenty men of the New Mexican National guard arrived from Deming today and joined the federal troops.

The Mexican fugitive said that Villa addressed his men yesterday just before ordering an advance on Columbus. According to the Mexican's account Villa declared the watchword would be "death to Americans," and added that the "killing of Americans was just because citizens of the United States were responsible for the wretched condition of Mexico."

"The United States intends to swallow Mexico," Villa shouted, said the fugitive, "let us do what we can to make it stick in their throats."

Several Mexicans Killed. A large number of Mexicans were killed. Their bodies dotted streets where they had been posted picking off Americans as they emerged past mill out of dwellings and hotels.

There appeared no wounded. Several guests were burned to death in the Central hotel, which was one of the first buildings fired by Villa's men. Mexican bandits standing outside the flaming building shot down A. L. Ritchie, proprietor of the hotel, and W. R. Walker, a guest, as they attempted to dash out of the door.

Both were dead when picked up later. C. C. Miller owner of a drug store, was shot as he tried to enter the door of the Hoover hotel. An adobe structure, whose mud walls protected a score of cowering women and children who remained in the rooms while a howling mob of bandits surged through the surrounding streets.

The attack was a complete surprise, Villa deceiving all the authorities by dispatching a telegram to Hachita, N. M., last night, saying that he was at the Nogales ranch in Chihuahua, near the border, at least forty-four miles from here. This telegram was signed ostensibly by the American caretaker of the ranch and stated that Villa personally was at the ranch house.

Carranza Scout Brings News. Carranza customs guards at the border gates, three miles south of Columbus, had dug a few rifle pits for the fifty Carranza soldiers who fled Palomas when Villa appeared in the vicinity several days ago.

Villa came over the line at this point, apparently, and the Carranza soldiers were reported to have joined him. Deploying his men in open order, Villa sent them up a deep ditch running up from the border and paralleling the road skirting the United States army camp, the customs house and the railroad station. The fight began in town, and the families of A. L. Riggs, customs officer, and that of L. Jager, station agent of the El Paso Southwestern railroad, were in the midst of it, but no member of either was hurt.

Lieutenant Casteman, officer of the day, turned out all the men remaining in the camp. Shrieking battle yells, the Mexicans, in overwhelming numbers, rushed savagely into the town north of the railroad tracks. A courier was sent to Major Lindley at Gibbons ranch, fifteen miles east, to bring up the troopers posted there. The first volley of rifles woke all the townspeople.

Villa Commands in Person. Villa is said to have been seen by several Americans, urging on his men. He cut the telegraph wires east to El Paso to prevent any call for American troops stationed there. The telephones also went out of commission. While part of his forces fought the hastily rallied American troops, Villa is said to have detailed snipers and house burners, who flew to their task. Houses throughout the town were riddled with bullets.

A. L. Riggs, his wife and two children in the living quarters of the customs house, barricaded themselves behind mattresses on the floor. L. Jager, his wife and two children of the second floor of the railroad station did the same.

In the section house nearby, Foreman S. H. McCullough and wife and their four children sought safety on the floor. Bullets flew close over their heads.

A bullet wrecked the station clock. All who remained inside were comparatively safe in the most cases.

C. C. Miller was shot as he dashed from his drug store to the Hoover hotel across the street. He fell with his assailant the door. A woman, dragging a little child by the hand, was wounded and stumbled over the druggist's dead body.

Snipers Shoot at All Lights. Snipers posted in front of frame buildings set on fire and shot at the American inmates as they sought refuge from the flames fast destroying several buildings. These Mexican snipers moved liberally in the dark. The lighting of lamps by householders and hotel guests started out of sound sleep by the rifle fusillade, promptly brought a shower of bullets. Every house in town and nearly every window appeared to have been hit from once to a dozen times.

Civilians armed themselves and from vantage points within their homes answered the shots of the Mexicans. Some of the bandits sought to entice Americans out in the streets by speaking English. J. S. Green was caught in this way.

A Mexican who spoke excellent English called to him. Dean emerged from a doorway and his reply in English betrayed him to be an American and brought his death. At the same time another American shouted, "Hey! Who are you?"

"Viva Villa," came the reply. "I don't know who he is," the American answered, "but I have some of him left here scattered in the street." The American pointed to the street intersection where half a dozen dead bandit raiders lay in the pale light of dawn. The quick flash of a few pistol shots were visible and disclosed dying forms in the street, but Villa was not among them. He apparently left when Colonel Slocum's troopers began pressing these snipers toward the south.

Villa's buglers began sounding the retreat shortly before 6 o'clock. The town was cleared of them by 6:30 and the remaining people of Columbus began to take account of casualties and losses.

Walter Walker, who was shot at the Central hotel with the proprietor, W. T. Ritchie, was a delegate to the New Mexico state convention of Sunday schools. His body was burned in the ruins of the hotel.

Mrs. Rachael Walker, also a delegate from Playas, N. M., to the convention, was saved by Jolly water and his partner, Ben Aguirre, United States customs border riders, who tied sheets to her arms and lowered her from an upper window.

Walker was taken from the arms of his wife by one of the bandits who invaded the hotel. Despite her cries and appeals for mercy the bandit told her he wanted her husband to go downstairs and shake hands with his captain. A moment later Mrs. Walker heard the shots that killed her husband and the hotel proprietor. Shortly afterward oil was thrown on the building and a match applied. As the flames spread Garner and Aguirre reached Mrs. Walker's room, rescued her and escaped safely.

A bandit also invaded the Hoover hotel and shots sped through the halls and punctured the door. The proprietor, W. C. Hoover, his wife and two children, who were on the ground floor escaped the bandits notice.

Major Frank Tompkins with two troops of the Thirtieth cavalry was said to have crossed the border in pursuit of the retreating Mexicans.

Troop G, stationed at the border gate south of here caught the retreating Mexicans on the flank and killed eighteen. Corporal Wiscall of the same troop was killed, shot through the right eye.

Lieutenant Beason, of troop G, was wounded in the left arm. A number of the Mexican wounded were taken to the post hospital.

Colonel Slocum's revolver was shot out of his hand as he emerged from his quarters. The bullet dented the colonel's weapon making it useless.

J. J. Moore was shot through the body. He is believed to be fatally wounded.

Why is man and woman, half the time, feeling nervous, dependent, worried; some days really incapacitated by illness? If we all would practice inside-bathing, what a gratifying change would take place. Instead of thousands of half-sick, anemic-looking souls with pasty, muddy complexions we should see crowds of happy, healthy, rosy-cheeked people everywhere.

MUST BE PREPARED, SAYS GOV. CARLSON

their graves, has told us through history that if he is to be free he must be brave, told him that if he is to protect his sweetheart and his sister he must have a basic physical and mental equipment.

"Just as women were destined by nature to bring children into the world, so men were designed by nature to protect. It is the deepest call of his nature, and when he has responded to it he has been the most vitalized man.

"Why shouldn't your boy and mine, as they are gathering the fragments of knowledge, have it daily impressed upon them that when they become men, this country that is protecting and educating them may ask them to give their lives? In doing this you will find that patriotism, personal and national ideals will be born; there will come a seriousness and thoughts in these growing brains as deep and big as the responsibilities of history.

But if you will have them escape all this, then remember the penalty—call it nature's, destiny's or God Almighty's—disappointed bodies, intellects dwarfed by selfishness and the death of our common country.

Let Us Be Men. "We are all sorry that war convulses the earth, but rather than uselessly mourning because of its infinite problems, let us grip them as men, appreciating that giant problems have always brought forth giant men. I have no fears for this country, if we will arouse ourselves and each fix his own responsibility so that he can do his own part in case of national need. I hope you will not think that I am pessimistic when I say that our people, because of their prosperity, have grown over-selfish, that they have been inclined to forget their state and their country, and as a consequence internal problems have developed which threaten disintegration.

"Since I have been governor I have made a special study of the military situation and find that in most every agricultural college there is the requirement of military as well as technical training, but the training today in most of these agricultural colleges is the same obsolete, antiquated thing of a quarter of a century ago. This is one illustration that because of a lack of interest in these great national and state problems we get but a minimum of efficiency. Here is that great plant of tremendous potential possibilities, already paid for, and yet almost totally disregarded."
