STARTED first in Collier's Weekly, and the local press has now taken it up-do Omaha women know how to dress?

Mrs. Emily Post stayed a few days at the Hotel Fontenelle. Just the Subscription club dance, entertainwhat was the occasion of her grudge against Omaha society is not ing forty guests at dinner this evening plain, but she certainly went back to New York and, with the way of writers, she hit back in type.

When you can't attack a woman's morals, criticise her clothes-it's easier and safer, and perhaps equally annoying.

So Mrs. Post did not say there were too many divorces in Omaha, too much eigarette smoking among women, too much tippling in public, too evident neglect of homes.

She scolded with another medium-Omaha women looked as if they donned their clothes, she said, while the women of other cities looked as

For the very life of me, I can see nothing to get all up in the air over this. Kipling speaks of a woman who looks as if she stood in the middle of her room and had her maid throw her clothes upon her.

As this mode of dressing is still more unconscious and unceremonial than "donning," Mrs. Post would probably appreciate it more than even "putting on" clothes.

An Omaha matron is credited with upholding Mrs. Post's criticism and remarking how much better was the taste of a young matron of New York society, Mrs. Harriman, who appeared here in a serge suit, putting Omaha women in their silks, laces and nets to shame.
