Closing quotations on bends today were that apples were good and good for peo-ple. What other morsel of the gods comof June, the glow of July, the fragrance of summer rains, the sharpness of early frost, the richness of the earth and the splendor of the heavens? What boy was ever worth counting who did not cat more apples than he ought? And what man, inh love, does not at the bottom of his heart recognize that to put apples hetween flaky crusts is to mingle nectar and ambrosia? Let the frost be never so thick on the pumpkins and the choppers grind their mincement never so finethese are for occasions. But apple pie is for living.

But about apple ple and morals. We think that's fairly evident. It's not a no man who retains his affection for apple pie has lost his kinship with human nature.
